ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The authors and publishers would be glad to acknowledge indebtedness to a very large number of trained and scholarly persons who have rendered invaluable assistance in the preparation of this book. The limitations of space, however, prevent them from giving more than a partial list of those whose painstaking care has made its production possible.

Outstanding among the specialists who have contributed to the scientific accuracy of the definitions are the following: Dr. Ezra Allen, Professor of Biology, Ursinus College, Botany, Zoölogy, Biology, Ornithology, Entomology; Dr. George H. Ashley, State Geologist, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, Geology, Mineralogy; Mr. Richard J. Beamish, Staff of the Philadelphia Inquirer, Philadelphia, Sports; Mrs. Sara Callinan Cummings, Director of Music, William Penn High School, Philadelphia, Music; Mr. Lionel D. Edie, Professor of Economics, Indiana University, Economics, Sociology, Finance, Commerce, Political Science; Dr. Frederick Ehrenfeld, Professor of Geology and Mineralogy, University of Pennsylvania, Geology, Mineralogy; Mr. J. Suter Jammer, Electrical Engineer, Western Electric Company, Electricity, Engineering; Mr. Walter Davis Lambert, A.M., Mathematician, United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, Mathematics, Geodesy, Navigation; Mr. J. Alfred Lynd, Attorney, Philadelphia, Law; Dr. Francis N. Maxfield, Professor of Psychology, Ohio State University, Psychology; Dr. Walter M. Mitchell, Metallurgical Engineer, E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company, Astronomy, Chemistry, Metallurgy; Dr. Florence H. Richards, Medical Director, William Penn High School, Philadelphia, Physiology, Anatomy; Dr. H. C. Richards, Professor of Mathematical Physics, University of Pennsylvania, Physics; Dr. R. J. E. Scott, M.D., Editor of "The Practitioner's Medical Dictionary," Anatomy, Surgery, Pathology.

The editorial staff has included Mr. Russell K. Alspach, Mr. William T. Atwood, Miss Anabel Barber, Miss Katharine W. Barnes, Mrs. Helen Barnes Brown, Mr. C. H. Collester, Miss Frances E. Cowdrick, Mrs. Marie B. Edie, Mrs. Helen Lynch Fulford, Mr. J. C. Hartman, Mr. George C. Harvey, Mabel D. Holmes, Ph.D., Mr. H. Downing Jacobs, Ruth Lansing, Ph.D., and Mr. Winfield A. Townsend. Special acknowledgment is made to Dr. Holmes for assistance in nearly every phase of the editorial work; to Mrs. Fulford for the lists of synonyms and antonyms and for the paragraphs discriminating the uses of synonyms; to Mr. Ralph B. Allen, Frederick W. Kilbourne, Ph.D., and Mr. L. F. Solano for assistance in etymology; to C. O. S. Mawson, Ph.D., President of the Mawson Editorial School of Boston, for suggestions regarding many words from Oriental sources and for valuable help in other phases of the editorial work; to Robert Grimshaw, Ph.D., for reviewing the definitions of many scientific and technical terms; to Dr. Mitchell and Dr. Ehrenfeld for assistance in the preparation of the Tables of Chemical Elements and of Geologic Eras, respectively; to Dr. Albert Croll Baugh for the "Brief Account of the Development of English" on page viii, and for assistance in the preparation of the Chart of Indo-European Languages; to Dr. S. G. Barton, Assistant Professor of Astronomy, University of Pennsylvania, for the star maps and for assistance with the table of constellations; and to Dr. Charles H. Grandgent, Professor of Romance Languages, Harvard University, for assistance with the chart of the phonetic alphabet in Appendix I. Special acknowledgment should be made to Mr. F. Russell Lyons, who prepared most of the line drawings in the book; to Mr. Louis E. McAllister for the series of nine part-page plates illustrating styles of architecture; to Mr. George Miksch Sutton, State Ornithologist of Pennsylvania, for the color plate of birds; to Miss Helen Winchester for the color plate of insects; and to Mr. Edwin J. Prittie for the color plates of arms and armor, costume, and flowers.

INTRODUCTION

The reference habit. For developing breadth and accuracy of knowledge nothing is so important as the reference habit. The person who, when pricked by doubt of a statement as made, or stimulated with curiosity regarding a fact unknown, habitually turns to dictionary, atlas, almanac, or other appropriate authority, soon acquires mastery of an enviable store of accurate and dependable knowledge for everyday use. But many who would like to cultivate this habit are prevented from doing so by the lack of reliable and convenient works of reference. It is to supply this lack with as much fulness, accuracy, and convenience as is humanly possible within the compass of 1500 pages that the Winston Simplified Dictionary and Reference Library is offered to the public.

The Dictionary. The English Dictionary, which forms the largest single division of the Library, represents a distinct advance in the art and science of lexicography. It is neither an abridgment nor an expansion of any other work. The text has been prepared, under the general direction of the editors, by a special staff of lexicographers, who have spent more than five years in assembling their materials, writing, revising, and polishing the definitions, and correcting the proofs. In this process they have reviewed the lexicographical evidence afforded by all the available sources of information, and have continuously made use of the services of a distinguished corps of consulting experts in every field of technical or special knowledge.

Simplicity with accuracy. The first essential of a dictionary is that the definitions shall be both simple and accurate. While they must necessarily be brief, they need not, with rare exceptions, employ words which must themselves be looked up before the definition can be understood. The editors have made it their consistent aim to employ in all definitions only words in common use. There are a few terms, it must be granted, dealing with abstruse or involved concepts, with complicated technical processes, or with new discoveries, which cannot be defined without the use of words unfamiliar to the lay reader. Such cases, however, have been brought to the irreducible minimum by drawing upon expert knowledge of the terms defined, by patient care and skill in the phrasing of the definitions, and often by a clarifying explanation within the definition itself. Those consulting the book will find under every entry statements which they can understand and apply immediately, without the burden—which, indeed, few will assume—of reference to some distant page for further explanations.

Facility of use. A second essential of a dictionary, or of any other work of reference, is that it yield its information quickly and easily. To this end no expense or trouble has been spared. Each main entry is printed in clear, bold-faced type of unusually large size, and is strikingly easy to locate on the page. When the word is once found, the desired information is immediately at hand without the necessity of turning to another part of the book. For example, in the case of variant spellings of the same word, as calcimine and kalsomine, the definition is given under each entry, with indication of the preferred spelling, and the searcher is spared the exasperation and delay almost universally met with in other dictionaries of finding under kalsomine some such expression as "variant of calcimine (which see)"; and similarly with alternative terms for the same concept, as swingletree and whiffletree, ornithorhynchus and duckbill. In the case of words naming objects or parts not illustrated with a special cut, but shown elsewhere, as pistil in the illustration of flower, chassis in the illustration of automobile, baffle plate in the illustration of gas engine, the reader is referred to the word under which the illustration is found. The charts and tables have been constructed with the utmost attention to facility of use. The volume itself is made in a size invitingly convenient to handle.

Vocabulary. The vocabulary covers exhaustively the range of words in current literary usage. In addition, obsolete, archaic, and dialectal words used by the outstanding writers of English from the Elizabethan Age to the present have been included, especially such words as occur in Shakespeare, Milton, and the Bible. Scottish words, many of which have become familiar through the border ballads and the works of Burns, Scott, Stevenson, and others, have received careful attention. Scientific and technical terms are given with unusual fulness. Colloquialisms and slang expressions, often a fertile field for the permanent enrichment of the literary vocabulary, have been included so far as warranted. Common abbreviations and the symbols for the chemical elements are listed in their regular alphabetical place. Included in the main vocabulary are Biblical and mythological proper names and the names of well-known characters of fiction, and also a careful selection of those words and brief phrases, such as camaraderie, savoir-faire, ex post facto, which, while not yet naturalized as English words, form a part of the working vocabulary of an educated person. The great bulk of proper names, however, and of foreign phrases and quotations likely to be met with in English writing, are listed in separate appendixes.

Pronunciation, illustrations, etc. In other particulars, which within certain limitations have come to be recognized in lexicography as almost standard requisites, the policy followed in the Dictionary has demanded accuracy, thoroughness, and general excellence surpassing anything heretofore offered at the price and within the avowed scope of the present work. The pronunciation of every main word is given in full by respelling it according to the system of letters and diacritical marks in common use in American textbooks, the key to which can be readily referred to on each page; and the etymology of each word, so far as known, is fully and accurately indicated. Eight colored plates and more than 3000 line drawings clarify the definitions, and several tables, lists, and charts have been set up to amplify and explain the definitions of such terms as lend themselves to this treatment. Quotations illustrative of the use of words, often of far more practical value than formal definitions, have been employed with unusual liberality, and with much pains to make the quotations really illuminating. Synonyms are listed, often with full paragraphs discriminating the nicer shades of meaning; and lists of antonyms are often added. Grammatical information as to the principal parts of verbs, the plural of nouns, and the comparison of adjectives, together with the preposition or other special construction required, is supplied whenever doubt or uncertainty could arise. Variant spellings and variant pronunciations are noted in their proper place. Compound words are indicated by a large, clear hyphen, easily distinguished from that used to mark the division into syllables.

Ref. L

Other divisions of the Library. A wealth of information not adapted to presentation in formal definitions or under the alphabetical arrangement of the main vocabulary is given in the introductory pages and in the appendixes.

Information about language is given, of course, under each entry of the Dictionary proper. The introductory pages contain a discussion of the Spelling and Pronunciation of Inflectional Forms in English, as the plural of nouns, the principal parts of verbs, the comparison of adjectives, etc., and a History of the Development of the English Language. The appendixes contain a concise Outline of English Grammar, with a full treatment of Punctuation, and examples of Idioms and of Faulty Diction. The Dictionary of English Phrases throws additional light upon the source, history, and present meaning of a multitude of words, quotations, and current turns of speech. There is also a full selection of Foreign Words and Phrases, pronounced and translated or explained.

The section on Signs and Symbols and that on Weights, Measures, and Standards contain reference material of much intrinsic value, never before made accessible in a general reference work.

The Chronological Table presents a convenient bird's-eye view of history. The large appendix of Persons and Places lists and pronounces the proper names of outstanding importance, with dependable information about each. The list of Christian Names of Men and Women includes etymologies and the corresponding forms in modern foreign languages, fully pronounced.

The Gazetteer and Atlas represent an especially important field of reference, providing information usually accessible only in a separate volume. The Gazetteer contains upwards of 10,000 entries with appropriate statistical information, and locates each name on the maps by means of a convenient key. The Atlas, comprising thirty-three pages of maps made expressly for this work, covers the entire world; the boundaries have been made to reflect accurately the latest political developments in the several continents; and the spellings of the names have been made uniform with the rulings of the United States Geographic Board.

The several additional divisions thus round out the Dictionary into an unusually complete Reference Library. Indeed, most of the questions that normally arise during the day in connection with language, literature, art, science, history, current events, or general information, can be answered accurately and conveniently from one page or another.

Using this book. In conclusion particular attention is called to pages xiv to xx, where concise directions are given for the efficient use of this volume. These pages should be carefully studied. The Winston Universal Reference Library, like a sewing machine, a slide rule, or a typewriter, is a tool, designed to be used with frequency and facility. Like these other tools, it cannot be used with complete efficiency unless the technique of using it is fully mastered. A little time spent in learning the many ways in which this book can be made to yield satisfactory and dependable information will pay for itself many times over. In its preparation, the publishers have not hesitated to devote the time, expense, patient ingenuity, and trained skill necessary to accomplish the work in the spirit in which it was conceived. There has resulted an entirely new book, a definite contribution to reference literature. The simplicity, completeness, convenience, and scholarship of this book should help thousands of its users to establish the reference habit as a means of continuous instruction and self-culture.

A BRIEF ACCOUNT OF THE DEVELOPMENT OF ENGLISH

By ALBERT CROLL BAUGH, PH.D.

Assistant Professor of English, University of Pennsylvania

There are more languages in the world than the average reader has any notion of. Some are spoken by great nations and millions of people; others are found in tiny countries and remote regions of the earth. The languages in any given area have a tendency to resemble each other and fall into fairly well defined groups. When the resemblances of vocabulary and grammar within a group are sufficiently great, we call that group of languages a family. As in families of people, the resemblance is explained by assuming a common ancestry from which these languages have been derived. French, Spanish, Portuguese, Italian, though distinct languages, are known to be related because they have been observed within historic times to assume their present forms in developing from their common Latin source; and in the same way, other languages, widely different in many particulars, can be safely said to be related through a common ancestry, even though the source tongue may have perished without leaving any record of itself. Thus most of the languages of Europe and a few of southwestern Asia show such similarities as to justify their being grouped into one great family of smaller related groups. From the geographical situation of these languages, we call the family the Indo-European family. The chart of this family, as printed on page 499, opposite the word Indo-European in the text, will serve to give an idea of its scope and importance. English belongs to this family, and among its kindred are Latin and its descendants; Greek; Russian; Celtic; the principal languages of Persia and India; and, in closer kinship, German, Dutch, Danish, and the other Teutonic languages.

The languages comprising this Teutonic subfamily have developed from a common source, called Old Teutonic, or Primitive Germanic, just as French, Spanish, etc., have developed from Latin. Old Teutonic, though of slightly later development than some, was a sister tongue, so to speak, with Sanskrit, Greek, Latin, Old Celtic, and the others of the same generation, and like these developed its special characteristics, many of which have been preserved in English. The most striking one was brought about by a sweeping change in many of the consonant sounds, carried out according to fairly regular rules, and serving to mark a Teutonic word at once as different from the same word in one of these sister tongues. (See Grimm's Law and Verner's Law in the main vocabulary.) The principal accent of a word, which formerly had shifted from syllable to syllable in the different forms of the word's inflection, became relatively fixed upon the root syllable in Teutonic; and in many cases the syllables which were thus deprived of the accent, especially when final, were slurred over and weakened in pronunciation until they disappeared. The peculiarity known as ablaut (see main vocabulary), though it had existed before, was more fully developed, and put to use as a distinguishing tense sign in many verbs, as is seen still in English sink, sank, sunk, or fly, flew, flown. Also, a t-suffix, seen in English as -t, -d, -ed, was developed into a sign of past tense in the regular verbs. The original inflection of nouns and pronouns was simplified by the loss of several cases, as the old ablative and locative; and in all modern Teutonic languages, a dual number has been lost. Such changes as these from the original Indo-European, with the addition of a host of new words to the vocabulary, served to make Teutonic as distinct a language as Latin or Greek; and it was from such a language, of which no inscriptions, literary remains, or other records whatever have been preserved, that Anglo-Saxon, or Old English, was developed.

The language now called English had its first existence as an individual tongue, differentiated from other Teutonic dialects, in the early centuries of the Christian era. Its home was among certain tribes living on the mainland of Europe, where Belgium, Holland, Denmark, and northern Germany are now shown on the map. It had a fairly elaborate grammar with many inflectional endings, as in Latin and Greek. It was probably the vehicle of a very fine oral literature of lays and epics, all of which except a few relatively late examples have unfortunately been lost.

Individual adventurers and traders, speaking English, must have made many visits to Britain during the Roman occupation. But the effective introduction of English to its present home is conveniently dated from A.D. 449, when Hengest and Horsa, leading a band of Jutes from Jutland, opened the way for a succession of marauders and settlers from the Continent. Britain at this time was peopled by a number of races, the most important of which were the Celts, and all of which were ultimately conquered. But most of the languages of these conquered races have perished without trace of living vernacular or written record; for the invading Teutonic tribes did not mingle with the conquered natives, as did their cousins the Franks in France, the West Goths in Spain, the Lombards in Italy, etc., but drove them out or exterminated them. Certain Celtic dialects alone survived, and, indeed, are still spoken in some of the outlying districts; but in a short time after the conquest, Britain as a whole had become thoroughly English, and the English language and literature, transplanted from the lowlands of northwestern Europe, began a new stage of independent growth.

It is customary to speak of three periods in the development of the English language. In the Anglo-Saxon, or Old English, period (about 700–1100), the inflections are still relatively complete; there are no words of French origin, and only a very few of Latin origin. The form and vocabulary differ so greatly from modern English that we of today cannot read it without special study. A quite abundant Anglo-Saxon literature has been preserved, of which typical examples are the great epic poem "Beowulf," an early metrical paraphrase of "Genesis" and "Exodus," Cynewulf's poems of "Elene," "Juliana," "Crist," etc., King Alfred's translations, including that of Bede's "Ecclesiastical History," and the "Anglo-Saxon Chronicle." The Middle English period (1100–1500) saw the steady weakening of the unaccented syllables, and a great enrichment of the vocabulary. Outstanding among its products are the "Ormulum," "Havelock the Dane" and a number of other metrical romances, the "Cursor Mundi," "Piers the Plowman," Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales," Wycliffe's translation of the Bible, and, toward the end, Malory's "Le Morte d'Arthur." The Modern English period extends from 1500 on. Early examples of the literature of this period are Tyndale's translation of the New Testament, Barclay's "Ship of Fools" (translated from the German), and a number of miracle and morality plays, followed by Spenser's "Faërie Queene" and the brilliant writings of the Elizabethan Age. During this last period, though English has changed and developed, the changes have been much less striking than during the earlier periods; and even its earliest literature can be read by one acquainted with modern English.

Both in grammatical structure and in vocabulary, the basis of our present English language is still strongly Teutonic. Most of the simpler and more fundamental words, which we use hundreds of times a day, are Old English words. Such, for example, are nouns like father, mother, son, daughter, man, child, eye, ear, mouth, heart, gold, silver, wood, stone, sand, house, barn, door, bed, bench; adjectives like hot, cold, good, old, young, new, hard, little; verbs like answer, send, buy, see, hear, sit, stand, run; and numerous prepositions, conjunctions, adverbs, and pronouns. The English language has, however, been greatly enriched by additions from a number of outside sources, which it is interesting to know about. One of the most important is Latin. Not many years after the Anglo-Saxons settled in England—in 597, to be precise—Roman missionaries came to the island and converted the people to Christianity. Churches and monasteries were established, Latin was used in the services, and through such contacts the Anglo-Saxons became familiar with many Latin words. Among those that came into the English language at this time are altar, bishop, candle, priest, shrine, and fork, box, plant, mill, lily. Some of the borrowed words were originally from the Greek, from which they had been previously borrowed by the Romans. From this date on, Latin words have been added constantly to the English vocabulary. All through the Middle Ages, Latin was known by educated men, and it was natural that they should fall back upon Latin words to express ideas which the English vocabulary had no means to express. During the Renaissance, when the influence of Latin was particularly strong, Greek also became widely known among scholars, and left many traces on English. The revival of interest in the life and literature of classical times led to the translation of many works from the great Greek and Latin authors into English. In these translations, new words were needed, or felt to be desirable, and were added to the language and became completely naturalized and indispensable. It would now be difficult, for example, to express the ideas conveyed by the words autograph, elastic, myth, skeleton, tonic, without using these words from the Greek.

Another important source from which the English vocabulary was enriched at an early date was the language of the Danes. The Danes were piratical sea rovers, who began a series of invasions of England in the year 787. These invasions continued more or less constantly until, as a result, shortly after the year 1000 a Danish king was placed on the throne of England. Most of the words that came in at this time are common, homely words, such as are, sky, call, leg, loose, skin, take, etc.

A more important source, from which the English language has derived a great many words, is the French. In the year 1066, England was conquered by the Normans. The Normans were originally Northmen—that is, Danes—like those who had invaded England. They had settled in France around the mouth of the Seine River and had adopted the ways of life and the habits of the French people, giving up their own language and learning French. Their conquest of England was the result of a claim which William, their Duke, had made to the throne of England, upon the death of Edward the Confessor. Since the English did not acknowledge William's claim, he invaded England with an army in order to enforce it by the sword. Many French followers came with him, and from among these French-speaking people a new nobility was created to replace the old English nobles who had been killed off. English, however, continued to be spoken by the lower middle classes and the peasantry; but it was not the language of learning, and no one sought to subject it to an artificial codification or to the restrictions by which grammarians often seek to preserve what they consider to be the original purity of a language. Thus it was able to develop naturally, in large measure to throw off its cumbersome inflections, and, just because it was ignored by the aristocracy, to take long strides toward its present directness and simplicity of structure.

The new nobility spoke their native French, and in a short time French had become the language of all the upper classes in England. This unnatural situation existed for some two hundred years, and then political conditions drew all the people of England together and caused a breach between England and France. The English language was spoken by a much larger number of people in England than was French; and, now that conditions were favorable, English spread rapidly among the upper classes, so that by the year 1300 it was understood once more by everyone. The extensive knowledge of French by the upper classes in the island led naturally to the introduction into the English language of a great many French words, which they had been accustomed to use and for which the English language, in many cases, had no equivalent. These words were such as the governing classes in England would have used, words having to do with the government, with the army and navy, the law courts and the church, with art, architecture, and fashion. It is impossible to say how many French words came into the English language during this period, but the number must run well into the thousands.

As we noticed that the words expressing simple, homely ideas are largely from Anglo-Saxon, so the language of learning and formal speech is from the French; for the Norman French were more highly civilized and educated than the Saxons. As the French had Latin as its foundation, a large Latin element came, in changed form, with the French into English, and it often happened that a French word was adopted with nearly the same meaning as a Saxon word already in use, the French word serving to invest the idea named with an air of learning, elegance, or culture. The following pairs of words, from native English and from Latin-French sources respectively, will help to make this clear:

home—residence	king—sovereign
show—signify	horseman—cavalier
help—relieve	break—destroy
dear—precious	keep—maintain
hard—difficult	kind—gracious
hide—conceal	buy—purchase
freeze—congeal	feeling—sentiment

It is thus to Anglo-Saxon that we look back as the source of our familiar, everyday speech; to Latin, directly or through French, as that tongue which has enriched and dignified our language with the terms of science, learning, and more formal speech.

As a result of these many additions to the English vocabulary, the language has become wonderfully rich and expressive, but it is not alone dependent upon borrowing for additions to its word stock. Quite as many words are made by uniting stems, or a stem with a prefix, or a stem with a suffix, thus making compounds of various kinds. The habit of making a new word by combining two other words was a strong one in Anglo-Saxon, as it is still in modern German. The Anglo-Saxon said book-house for library, and tree-wright for carpenter, and the English language of today is given to making similar ones, such as boathouse, bathhouse, storehouse, smokehouse, fire house, greenhouse, etc., shipwright, wheelwright, playwright, and many more such words, which in most cases require no explanation and are consequently called self-explaining compounds. When we say railroad, trolley car, steamboat, blacksmith, waterworks, department store, and life-insurance company, we are using such self-explaining compounds, whether we write the elements joined or separate.

When, as explained above, we resort to borrowing from other languages, the process of adaptation is equally interesting. Most words of more than one syllable are formed of two or more distinct parts. The most important part, or foundation, of the word—the part that really gives the thought of the word—is called the root or the stem. For instance, in the word marine, the stem is mar-, from the Latin word mare (pronounced mä′rā), meaning sea. Thus marine means pertaining to the sea; we have extended its meaning so that we say that marines are soldiers of the sea, and marine trade means trade on the sea. The same stem appears in the words maritime and mariner. The stem of the word dictate is dict-, meaning speak or say, a stem which we find also in such words as predict, to say before or foretell, contradict, to say against or oppose, and in dictionary. The stem of the Latin word for foot is ped-, which occurs as a stem in pedal, quadruped, and pedestrian.

In many words there are two parts of equal importance, or two stems. Such a word is phonograph. Phon- is a Greek stem meaning sound, found also in telephone, megaphone, and other words. Graph- is also a Greek stem meaning write; you will recognize it in such words as telegraph, autograph, and paragraph. A phonograph, then, in its literal meaning, is a contrivance that writes sounds.

The word thermometer is another two-stem word. Therm- is from a Greek word meaning heat, and meter is from a common stem meaning measure, so that a thermometer is an instrument that measures heat. A thermostat is a device for keeping the temperature of a room always the same; for therm-, as we have seen, means heat, and stat- is from a Greek word meaning to stand still. Many more such words of two stems you will find from a study of an unabridged dictionary.

Words of one stem, however, are much more common than those of two or more. Most words have just one important part, whose meaning is more or less changed by a less important syllable. If this syllable is put before a stem, it is called a prefix; if it is added after a stem, it is called a suffix.

A knowledge of prefixes and suffixes is a great help to a fuller understanding of English words. A prefix usually alters the fundamental meaning of the word; a suffix changes the part of speech. Thus if to the word take we prefix mis-, the meaning becomes to take wrongly, or to make an error; for mis- means wrongly. If, however, we add to mistake the suffix -en, the word is changed from a verb to an adjective, though the fundamental meaning of the word is not changed. Again, to prefix trans- to the word plant adds to the original meaning the idea of removal from place to place, but to add to transplant the suffix -able merely makes the word an adjective without changing the thought.

A few cases will illustrate the extent to which words may be built up from stems, prefixes, and suffixes. Though the literal meaning of such a word is by no means always the same as the meaning in common use, yet the literal meaning helps decidedly in the understanding of the word. Thus, to take a word with Latin elements, the prefix trans- means across, the stem lat- means to carry, and the suffix -ion means the act or state; but translation, literally the act of carrying across, is most commonly used of the special carrying or transference from one language to another; and similarly bene-fact-or, literally a well-do-er, one who does well, comes to mean one who confers a benefit. In the case of native English words, the elements sometimes merge so completely into one another as almost to lose their identity: we may not think of a seer as a see-er, or one who sees; the s-sound of once and twice, representing an old adverbial suffix, is not now-a-days felt as such; and the suffix in -th used to form abstract nouns, though easily recognized in strength, width, height (for older heighth), etc., is less obvious in youth (young-ness), health (whole-ness), filth (foul-ness), birth (a bearing), sloth (slow-ness), aftermath (after-mowing).

Some of the common prefixes, suffixes, and combining forms from Latin and Greek are included in the list given on the next page. Notice that a prefix frequently becomes changed in form for the sake of greater ease in pronunciation. Thus ad-, meaning to or for or against, becomes ac- when used with a stem whose first letter is c, as in the words accept (ac-, to; -cept, take: take to oneself) and accede (ac-, to; -cede, come, go: agree). When ad- is placed before a stem beginning with f, the d becomes f. Such a change has taken place, for instance, in the word affix (af-, to; -fix, fasten: attach). Again, con- becomes col- when used before a stem whose initial letter is l, as in the word collect (col-, together; -lect, gather: gather together). Though there are hybrid words, such as auto-mobile, false-hood, book-case, most compounds (as wheel-wright, bene-factor, tele-phone) and words made by joining a prefix to a stem (as over-board, circum-scribe, syl-logism) are composed of elements from the same language; hence the examples given on the following page with the prefixes and suffixes from Latin and Greek will be found to illustrate other Latin and Greek elements in English.

Word	Prefix	Stem	Suffix	Literal Meaning	Common Meaning
transportation	trans- across	port- carry	-ation act or state	act of carrying across	act, means, or system of carrying

The Latin roots, prefixes, and suffixes, however, form by no means the whole of the English language. They have been spoken of first because they are the easiest to understand, as they are little changed in form and meaning from the original. The real strength of the language, the more familiar, simpler words, the words of common, everyday speech, are Teutonic in origin.

A study of the following list of Anglo-Saxon words and related words of modern English, and of Anglo-Saxon prefixes and suffixes, will give some idea of the influence of the Teutonic element in familiar speech.

Word Stems

bacan: bake, baker
bēaten: beat, beater
beran: bear, bearer, bearable bītan: bite, bitten, bit būgan: bow, bough
cat: cat, kitten
cēap: cheap, chapman
clīofan: cleave, cleft, cliff cnāwan: know, knew, knowledge cunnan: cunning
dælan: deal
dragan: draw, drag, dray
faran: far, fare, farewell flēon: flee, fled hlāf: loaf licgan: lie, lay mæg, may, might, mighty rædan: read, riddle tredan: tread, trot trēow: true, truth
witan: wit, wot, witty

Suffixes

-dōm, power, office, state: king-dom, prince-dom, free-dom
-ede, characterized by: dogg-ed, quick-witt-ed
-en, pertaining to; of the nature of: gold-en, wool-en

-er, one who; that which: bak-er, work-er
-feald, multiplied by; times: mani-fold, two-fold
-hād, state or rank: boy-hood, man-hood
-ing (originally son of), part of: farth-ing (fourth part)
-isc, of the nature of: child-ish, fool-ish
-lēas, loose from; without: hope-less, power-less
-līce, -līc, lic, like: home-ly, love-ly, lady-like
-ling, diminutive: duck-ling, gos-ling
-ling, -long, in the direction of: head-long
-scipe, originally, shape; form: used to make abstract nouns: king-ship, wor-ship, hard-ship
-sum, apt or adapted to: tooth-some, win-some
-ung, -ing, verbal noun suffix: sing-ing
-weard, in the direction of: back-ward

Year by year, century by century, English has grown and changed. How different from present-day English, for instance, is the language of Shakespeare! New words have come into the language from foreign tongues, and often old words have dropped out of use altogether or come gradually to have new meanings. Thus the old word clept, meaning named, and an, meaning if, are no longer used. The word humorous originally meant, not funny or causing laughter, but full of whims. Straight meant at one time immediately, and presently had once the same meaning: when a man said, "I will come straight (or presently)," he meant immediately, and not in a short time.

The English language is a "going concern." Its business is expanding constantly and there is continual need for new words to meet the demands made upon it. In these times of intense living and rapid progress we are daily finding new things, inventing new things, thinking new things, for which we need new words. Anything that affects a great many people or receives extensive consideration adds its quota of words to the vocabulary. Thus, the automobile has been responsible for many words now in common use. Some of these are old words given a special meaning, such as radiator, speedometer, gear, cylinder, muffler, magneto, storage battery, jack; others are more definitely limited in their use to the automobile, such as windshield, chauffeur, brake bands, inner tube, spare, balloon tire, piston rings, carburetor, skid, park. The motion picture is responsible for the common use or readaptation of words such as photoplay, screen, animated cartoon, reel, cinema, release. The war was fruitful in new words: tank, camouflage, doughboy, barrage, dugout, no man's land, slacker, conscientious objector, tear gas are examples. The development of the airplane has given us such words as seaplane, bombing plane, airdrome, ace, air raid, nose dive, tail spin. And most recently, the rapid development of radio transmission with its wide appeal has caused many people to talk about rheostat, grid leak, variable condenser, radio-frequency, aërial, antenna, ground-clamp, vernier, ear phones, loud speaker, crystal detector, to say nothing of static, broadcast, and stand by. In the colloquial speech, every year witnesses a new crop of slang expressions which come and go, generally without leaving any permanent trace on the language, but occasionally winning on their merit a right to general acceptance. Such words are mob (Latin mobile vulgus, the volatile common people), to pit (one person or team against another, a term originating in cockfighting), log rolling, etc. At the present time sweater, skyscraper, bleachers, speak-easy, thriller, molly-coddle, hustle, stunt, moonshiner, to mention typical examples, have either thrown off their slang character or are sanctioned through being used by persons of discriminating taste.

Though the Anglo-Saxon language forms, as has been shown, the basis of the English language, and the Latin has made a very large contribution, many words in our vocabulary have been transferred bodily from languages other than these two. In fact, the English vocabulary is made up of so many elements from different languages that it has become extremely cosmopolitan. It is favorably disposed towards taking in any new word that promises to be useful, irrespective of its source. In this respect, the English language is like America: it has remarkable powers of assimilation, and once a word is adopted, that word becomes so thoroughly a part of the language that we no longer think of it as a foreign word. Italy, Spain, India, Arabia, the West Indies, all have contributed their share. From Italy we have borrowed many terms pertaining to music and to the refinements of cultured life. Such words are libretto, crescendo, balcony, cameo, intaglio, catacomb. Spain has contributed many words naming commercial products, as indigo, guava, vanilla, alligator, as well as some others such as matador and mosquito. From Holland and Scandinavia come words pertaining to commerce and the sea, among which are schooner, wagon, yacht, skipper, sloop. India and Arabia with their products sent words naming them, such as chintz, candy, orange, borax, divan, alcohol, amber, coffee, cotton. Biblical literature brings us Hebrew terms, as cherub, jubilee, amen, alleluia, ephod.

America's contributions to the English language have come from the Mexicans, from the peoples of South America and the West Indies, and from the North American Indians. From Mexico come chocolate, coyote, tomato; from South America, tapioca, guano, jaguar, quinine, alpaca; from the West Indies, hurricane, maize, potato. The North American Indians have given us such terms as moccasin, moose, raccoon, tobacco, squaw, papoose, succotash—words which name things common in an Indian's daily life.

In this way has the whole world contributed and still is contributing to the language of the English-speaking peoples. What wonder, then, that the English tongue is full and rich and flexible? Its wealth of meaning, its beauty, its power are the result of centuries of growth and of the gifts bestowed by East and West, by North and South. Such a heritage may well be the pride of every Englishman and every American.

DIRECTIONS FOR THE USE OF THIS BOOK

The following pages, xiv to xix, should be carefully read by every person using this Dictionary. They explain what information he may expect to find explicitly stated in the definitions and what is indirectly stated or implied in the style.

I. GENERAL DIRECTIONS

Hyphens. In the main listing, in which accent is not indicated, a light hyphen is used to mark division into syllables, and a heavy hyphen to separate the parts of a compound word; as, self—de-ni-al. In the pronunciation, the light hyphen is omitted under an accent, and a double hyphen, retained even under an accent, is used in compound words; as, (sĕlf″=dē-nī′ăl). In variants and derivatives, printed in bold-faced type, the heavy hyphen is used for compound words, even under an accent; the lighter hyphen is used between syllables, except under an accent.

Variant Spellings. If two or more variations of the spelling of a single word exist, as calcimine and kalsomine, gauge and gage, each is listed in its proper alphabetical place, with pronunciation, grammatical information, and definition. With the listing of the preferred form appear the etymology and full definition of all the uses of the word, followed by "Also" and the permissible, but not preferred, variant form. With the listing of the permissible variant form, there is a reference to the preferred form for the etymology, and the definition is reduced to the barest essentials, followed (1) by "Also" and the preferred variant form, marked Pfd. S. (preferred spelling); or (2), in case the definition under the preferred form gives additional information, by "See" and the preferred form, marked Pfd. S. Variants are not given separate main entry when they would naturally appear in consecutive order or nearly so. In this case, the preferred form is given main entry, the other noted at the end of the definition as a variant.

Proper Names. A special Appendix contains the names of persons and places. Included within the main vocabulary, however, are Biblical and mythological names, and the names of characters conspicuous in literature or familiar in allusion, as King Arthur, Falstaff, Mrs. Grundy.

Foreign Words. The bulk of foreign words or phrases likely to be heard or met with in reading are included in a special Appendix. A few, however, so frequently used as to be a part of the educated person's vocabulary, yet still felt to be foreign, are included in the main text of the Dictionary, marked with an asterisk [*]. Words that have come to be regarded as English, even though of foreign form, are included in the vocabulary with no special mark, as abattoir, wigwam, acropolis, kindergarten, stucco, bonanza.

Homographs. Words spelled alike but from different sources and, usually, of different meanings, are given separate listings, each preceded by a small numeral, as [1]bark, the outer covering of a tree, [2]bark, the cry of a dog, and [3]bark, a kind of boat.

Abbreviations are given in their alphabetical order in the vocabulary. In case several abbreviations fall in alphabetical order between two vocabulary words, they are in general grouped within one article, separated by colon and dash. The symbols for the chemical elements are included with the abbreviations.

Prefixes and Suffixes are given in their alphabetical order in the vocabulary, and are defined and illustrated with unusual fulness.

Pronunciation. Every main listing is followed immediately by its pronunciation in parentheses, except in the case of expressions consisting of two or more words, each of which is listed elsewhere. The pronunciation of inflectional forms and derivatives is given whenever not completely regular. After a pronunciation has been given in full, an alternative pronunciation or the pronunciation of an inflectional form or derivative is sometimes abbreviated by omitting a part of the word which is pronounced the same way in all the forms; as, de-ter-mine (dē-tûr'mĭn), [p.t. and p.p. -mined (-mĭnd), p.pr. -mining].

Grammatical Information. The part of speech of each word is given by the appropriate abbreviation immediately following the pronunciation. The plurals of nouns, comparatives and superlatives of adjectives, and principal parts of verbs are given in light brackets whenever they are in any way irregular; but see page xvi for fuller details. As a concession to the necessity of economizing space, the principal parts of a verb obviously consisting of a prefix and a stem, as unbuckle, reassemble, are not given if the stem is listed elsewhere with its principal parts.

Etymology. The etymology is indicated in heavy brackets. The symbol < is used for "from" or "derived from." Source words are printed in italics. If an etymology consists of one or more italicized forms with no abbreviation indicating a language, the forms are to be understood as English. If, in a series of source words in the same article, a form occurs without a language abbreviation, the language is the same as that of the next preceding source word in the article for which this information is given; and, similarly, if no meaning follows an italicized form, its meaning is the same as that of the next following form for which a meaning is given. In general, the history of certain less important parts of a word, such as suffixes, has not been given. Cognates, though always interesting, are seldom given unless they are also source words. In a word of two or more parts, each part is traced to its source and the parts connected by the sign +; as, phonograph [<Gk. phōnē, a sound + graphein, to write]. In tracing the history of words which have gone through several changes, some intermediate forms have often been omitted, and reference made only to enough forms to show the connection of the word with its source.

No etymological information is given for the elements of hyphenated compound words, nor for those of phrases consisting of two or more words, if the elements are entered separately. For any other entry without etymology, the reader is referred to the next preceding entry for which an etymological note is given. For every word listed, an etymology note is given, either directly, or by explicit reference to some other entry, or by implied reference to an etymology given just above.

Expressions and Word Groups which have acquired a special meaning not immediately obvious, as atomic weight, no man's land, Immaculate Conception, are given in bold-faced type under the word in the expression which appears most likely to be looked up. In many doubtful cases such expressions are given in two or even three places, as money of account. Some expressions, conventionally printed as two words, are in practical use treated as one, and are listed in the vocabulary as independent words, as sal ammoniac, army worm.

Derivatives. Important derivative words frequently met with are as a rule listed in the main vocabulary with full definitions. The meanings of some derivatives, however, can be easily and directly inferred from the definition of the basic word, as rapidly from rapid, whiteness from white. Such words are given in bold-faced type, without definition, following the definition of the basic word, with syllabification, accent, and, in case of need, pronunciation. Derivatives which have developed special meanings of their own, as contractor, adorable, suspenders, are listed and defined separately.

II. SPELLING AND PRONUNCIATION OF INFLECTIONAL FORMS

Plural of Nouns.

1. Add -s (pronounced s) if the singular ends in the sound of f, k, p, t, or th as in bath—that is, any unvoiced sound with which the sound of s readily combines; as, puffs, rakes, tops, hopes, hats, births.

2. Add -s (pronounced z) if the singular ends:

(a) In a vowel sound; as, trees, laws.

(b) In the sound of b, d, ng, g, l, m, n, r, v, or th as in bathe—that is, any voiced consonant sound with which the sound of z readily combines; as, cabs, odes, bags, tongs, bells, plumes, tins, fires, Slavs, tithes.

3. Add -es (pronounced ĕz, ĭz) if the singular ends in a sibilant, or hissing, sound, whether voiced or unvoiced—that is, in the sound of s, sh, ch, z, zh, or j—and has no final silent -e; as, dresses, marshes, matches, topazes.

4. Add -s if the singular ends in a sibilant sound and has a final silent -e, the final e combining with the s to form an additional syllable, pronounced ĕz, ĭz; as, laces, mustaches, avalanches, breezes, garages, edges.

Plurals formed according to the rules stated above are not given in the Dictionary unless required for some special reason.

The following classes of irregular plurals are noted for reference, but the examples are not exhaustive:

5. Nouns ending in -o preceded by a vowel form the plural in -os (pronounced ōz); as cameos, folios; nouns ending in -o preceded by a consonant usually form the plural in -oes, as echoes, heroes, mosquitoes, mottoes, negroes, potatoes, tomatoes, etc.; but musical terms ending in -o add -s only, whether a vowel or a consonant precedes the o; as, altos, adagios.

6. Nouns ending in -y preceded by a consonant form the plural by changing the y to i and adding -es (the -ies being pronounced ĭz); but nouns ending in -y preceded by a vowel add -s (pronounced z); as, lady, ladies; turkey, turkeys.

7. A few nouns ending in -f change the f to v and add -es (pronounced z); as, loaf, loaves; wife, wives.

8. A few plurals are formed without the addition of -s. Such are geese, mice, children, oxen, deer, sheep; foreign plurals, as theses, alumni, phenomena, cherubim; dice, in which the s of dies has been changed to c and transposed; and other scattered cases.

Third Person Singular of Verbs.

The third person singular indicative active of all regular and most irregular verbs is formed according to rules 1–4 for the plural of nouns; as, gets, hears, wishes, rises.

Principal Parts of Verbs.

1. Regular verbs add -ed to the infinitive to form the past tense and past participle, and -ing to form the present participle. The -ing is always pronounced as an additional syllable.

2. If the infinitive ends in -d or -t not silent, the -ed is pronounced ĕd; as, ended, heated.

3. If the infinitive ends in the sound of b, g, ng, j, l, m, n, r, v, z, zh, or th as in bathe—that is, any voiced consonant except d—, or in a vowel sound, the -ed is pronounced d; as, hurled, hurrahed; but note rules 5 and 6.

4. If the infinitive ends in the sound of f, k, p, s, sh, ch, th as in bath—that is, any unvoiced consonant except t—, the -ed is pronounced t; as, amassed, attacked, marched; but note rules 5 and 6.

Principal parts derived according to the rules stated above are not given in the Dictionary unless required for some special reason. Following are the principal variations from these rules:

5. (a) Final -e, whether silent or not, is dropped before -ed, as, agreed, judged, tumbled.

(b) Final silent -e preceded by a consonant is dropped before -ing; as, racing, judging; but observe a few special cases, as singeing, dyeing, in which the omission of the e would cause confusion. In words where final silent -e is preceded by a consonant and l, those letters unite with -ing to form a single syllable; as, tumbling, rattling.

(c) Final -y preceded by a consonant is changed to i before -ed, but is retained before -ing; as, cried; flying; replied, replying.

(d) Final silent -e preceded by i is dropped and the i is changed to y before -ing; as, dying, lying.

6. Monosyllabic verbs, or polysyllables accented on the last syllable, ending in a single consonant preceded by a single vowel, double the final consonant before -ed or -ing; as, plan, planned, planning; prefer, preferred, preferring.

7. A considerable number of verbs have entirely irregular parts; as, buy, bought, buying; bear, past tense bore, past participle borne, present participle bearing. A few are defective, as can (no infinitive form), past tense could.

Comparison of Adjectives and Adverbs.

1. Adjectives of one syllable are regularly compared by adding -er and -est to the positive degree to form respectively the comparative and superlative; as, old, older, oldest.

2. A final silent -e is dropped before these endings; as, fine, finer, finest.

3. Adjectives of more than two syllables are regularly compared by using the words more and most with the positive; as, beautiful, more beautiful, most beautiful.

4. Adjectives of two syllables are compared by adding -er, -est (but see rule 2), if the resulting form is easily pronounced; otherwise they are compared by the use of more and most. Usage varies according to individual taste; but the table given at the foot of the page shows the general tendency.

5. Adverbs are usually compared by the use of more and most, though a few use -er and -est; as, near, nearer, nearest; often, oftener, oftenest. Some adverbs are not compared; as, here, there, now, then.

Comparatives and superlatives formed in accordance with the rules stated above are not given in the Dictionary unless required for some special reason. The following cases of irregularity are noted for the convenience of readers:

6. Monosyllabic adjectives or polysyllables accented on the last syllable, ending in a single consonant preceded by a single vowel, double the final consonant before -er and -est; as, big, bigger, biggest.

7. Adjectives ending in -y change the y to i before -er and -est; as, happy, happier, happiest.

8. A number of the commoner adjectives, and a few adverbs, are entirely irregular; as, good, better, best; ill, worse, worst; far, further, farthest.

9. Many adverbs which may function also as prepositions have an adjective function when compared, forming the comparative in -er and the superlative by adding -most to the positive or comparative; as, in, inner, inmost or innermost. Some adverbs have only a superlative comparison; as, fore, foremost.

Adjectives ending in unaccented	Use in Comparison	As in the following examples:
-y, -ly	usually suffixes	hardy, lovely;
-en, -ful, -some	either method; more often suffixes	rotten, wooden; helpful; handsome;
-al, -ile; -et	usually more and most	formal, facile; dulcet;
-ous, or other suffix containing a sibilant	usually more and most	gracious, peevish;
-like, -ine, or other suffix containing a long vowel	usually more and most	lifelike, bovine;
-ed, -ing, forming participial adjectives	almost always more and most; sometimes suffixes if the participial sense is lost	refined, stirring; conceited.

III. GUIDE TO PRONUNCIATION

The pronunciation of every main listing, and of all forms or derivatives concerning which any doubt could arise, is given by respelling within parentheses according to a simple phonetic key, accessible throughout the Vocabulary at the foot of the page. The following notes are intended as an amplification of this key. It should be borne in mind that these notes are an explanation of the symbols used in the key rather than of English spelling. Each of the symbols stands for one, and only one, specific sound value; but in many cases the sound value is represented in ordinary English spelling by any of several letters or combinations of letters, as shown by the illustrative words.

The principal stress in a word of two or more syllables is indicated by a primary accent [′] placed after the syllable to be stressed. A secondary accent is indicated by this same mark doubled [″]. A word may have a primary accent and no more, as sea′man; a primary and one or more secondary accents, as ear′mark″, huck′le-ber″ry, au″to-in-tox″i-ca′tion; or, occasionally, two primary accents, as back′bone′.

Symbols for English Sounds

ā as in *a*te, p*a*le, f*a*vor, prev*ai*l, w*eigh*, pl*ay*, st*eak*, v*ei*l, th*ey*, suède (long a): in accented, sometimes in unaccented syllables.

ă as in foli*a*ge, sen*a*te, legisl*a*tive: usually the equivalent of a long a sound in an unaccented syllable.

â as in r*a*re, p*a*rent, w*ear*, th*ere*, air, h*eir*: usually in an accented syllable before r.

ă as in c*a*t, g*a*rret, c*a*nteen (short a): in accented and unaccented syllables.

á as in *a*sk, comm*a*nd (intermediate a).

ä as in c*a*lm, f*a*r, c*a*rt, f*a*ther (broad or Italian a).

å as in loc*a*l, *a*ffect, *a*pply: usually equivalent to short a in an unaccented syllable ending in a consonant.

ȧ as in b*a*n*a*n*a*, p*a*r*a*de, sof*a*, comm*a*, retali*a*tory (indeterminate a): usually equivalent to intermediate a in an unaccented syllable not ending in a consonant.

ē as in *e*ven, sc*e*ne, str*ea*m, m*ee*t, s*ei*ze, p*eo*ple, k*ey*, mach*i*ne, y*ie*ld, Cæsar, cœliac (long e): in accented and sometimes in unaccented syllables.

ê as in *e*vent, c*r*eate: usually the equivalent of long e in an unaccented syllable.

ĕ as in def*e*ct, *e*dge, *e*nded, æsthetic (short e): in accented and unaccented syllables.

ê as in nov*e*l, rec*e*nt: usually equivalent to short e in an unaccented syllable.

ẽ as in writ*e*r, th*e*, conf*e*rence, elix*i*r, alt*a*r, act*o*r: frequently occurring before r; sometimes final; always in an unaccented syllable.

ī as in f*i*ne, del*igh*t, *i*dea, fl*y*, *ai*sle, aye, h*eigh*t, eye, tie (long i): in accented and unaccented syllables.

ĭ as in s*i*t, d*i*ssect, m*y*th: used also for final y as in lovel*y*, scemly, and for ie in such forms as lad*ies*, hurr*ies*: in accented and unaccented syllables.

ō as in h*o*pe, ech*o*, f*oa*m, d*oe*, bl*ow*, s*ew*, b*eau*, th*ough*, d*oor*, y*eo*man (long o): in accented and unaccented syllables.

ŏ as in p*o*tato, *o*bey, c*o*ronet: usually equivalent to long o in an unaccented syllable.

ô as in c*o*rd, *a*dorn, c*a*ll, l*aw*, c*augh*t, f*ough*t (intermediate o): in accented, sometimes in unaccented syllables.

ô as in d*o*g, s*o*ft, *o*blong, g*o*ne (open o): in accented and unaccented syllables.

ŏ as in c*o*ral, h*o*t, *o*blation, wh*a*t (short o): in accented and unaccented syllables.

ŏ as in c*o*mpare, c*o*nnect: usually equivalent to short o in an unaccented syllable.

ū as in c*u*re, *u*nit, yew, you, curf*ew*, f*eu*d (long u): in accented and sometimes in unaccented syllables.

ŭ as in *u*nite, circ*u*late, h*u*mane: usually equivalent to long u in an unaccented syllable.

û as in b*u*rn, occ*u*r, f*ur*, m*y*rtle, w*o*rd, refer, l*ea*rn, m*i*rth, amat*eur*: usually in an accented syllable, before an r in the same syllable.

ŭ as in h*u*rry, *u*pset, c*u*t, h*o*ney, en*ough* (short u): in accented and unaccented syllables.

ů as in foc*u*s, peril*ous*, s*u*cceed: usually equivalent to short u in an unaccented syllable.

o͞o as in b*oo*t, f*oo*l, d*o*, tr*ue*, r*u*le, thr*ew*, rheumatism, s*ou*p: in accented, sometimes in unaccented syllables.

o͝o as in f*oo*t, p*u*t, tearful, c*ou*ld: in accented and unaccented syllables.

ou as in bout, how, bough, sauerkraut.
oi as in boil, boy.
g as in get, gold, ghost (hard g).
j as in joy, gentleman, edge, age, cordial (soft g).
y as in yet, year, you.

th as in thin, bath, ether (a voiceless sound).
th as in then, bathe, either (a voiced sound).
hw as in when, why, where.
zh as in azure, measure, provision, rouge.
b, d, f, h, k, l, m, n, p, r, s, t, v, w, z, are used with their ordinary English values.
c, q, x are not used in indicating pronunciation. C in the conventional spelling is generally equivalent to k or s; q(u) = k(w); and x = ks or gz, or, initially, z.

Sounds in Foreign Languages

Although it would be useless to indicate the pronunciation of foreign words and phrases with scientific accuracy and completeness, certain sounds, not found in English, occur so frequently that an attempt should be made by every educated person to pronounce them with a fair degree of correctness. The symbols representing these sounds are given below. A few notes are also given on the application to foreign languages of some of the symbols used in giving English pronunciation. For the accurate pronunciation of the sounds themselves, however, one must go to a person who speaks the language in which they are used.

kh the guttural ch in German ach (äkh) or Scottish loch (lokh): used also for the very similar sound in German ich (ĭkh).

ñ the French nasal, as in enfant (äñ″fäñ′), bien (byäñ), nom (nôñ). The n and m are not pronounced, but cause the preceding vowel to be nasalized.

ö used for the sound of umlauted o in German (written ö or, sometimes, oe), as in schön (shön), Goethe (gö′tē); also in French words for eu final and before s, x, z, t, and for eû, as in feu (fö), danseuse (däñ″söz′). French eu in other cases is pronounced û, as in peur (pûr), danseur (däñ″sûr′).

ü for the sound of umlauted u in German, as in für (für), Lübeck (lü′bĕk), and for u in French, as in lune (lün), du (dü).

The symbol ē is used for the neutral unaccented vowel, as of writer (rīt′ēr) or of the definite article when unstressed (thē); for the unstressed final e so common in German, as in habe (hä′bĕ); and for certain cases of French mute e. In the pronunciation of French, however, the ē should be reduced to almost nothing. Thus tout de suite (to͞o″ dē süēt′) and décolleté (dā″kô″lē-tā′) should be pronounced almost as to͞od″ süēt′, dā″kôl″tā′.

The short open o so common in German and French, as in German doch, sollen, French homme, accorder, is most nearly given by the key symbol ô, as in dôg; but the sound should often be more briefly pronounced in foreign languages than in English dog, gone, etc.

The apostrophe [′] following an r, l, m, or y in French indicates that the letter so marked is to be pronounced almost as ēr, ēl, ēm, yē, but so closely with the preceding sound as not to make an additional syllable; as être (âtr′: almost in two syllables, but not as in English setter); simple (sâñpl′); rhumatisme (rü″mä″-tēsm″); Espagne (ĕs″pány″: not ĕs″pän′ĭ).

In the phonetic respelling of French words, one should observe carefully the combinations vowel + y and ü + vowel, as in canaille (kå″-nây″), suis (süē). If the manner of printing shows that the two letters are within the same syllable, the y and ü should be pronounced somewhat like vowels, but should not be given full syllabic value. The English word we, for example, consists of o͝o and ē run into one syllable; and similarly å and y, as in the French pronunciation of canaille (kå″nây″), and ü and ē, as in the pronunciation of suis (süē), must be run together into one syllable.

The accent in French is so different from that in English that no system of marking devised for one language is adequate for the other. In French, all full syllables are pronounced with nearly equal stress; but there is usually a rising inflection or slight stress on the last syllable, which has somewhat the effect of the English accent. In this book, French words are shown with a primary accent on the last syllable, representing the rising inflection or slight stress, and with secondary accents on all other full syllables. The rhythm of phrases of two or more words is similarly indicated by primary and secondary accents.

DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE

A, a (ā), [n.pl. A's; Aes; a's (āz)], the first letter of the English alphabet, or its sound (for certain uses, see alphabet, NOTE): A, Chem., the symbol [A] for the element argon: a, Alg., a symbol ordinarily used to represent a known or constant quantity:—A, adj. having the form of an A; as, an A tent:—A1 (ā′ wŭn′), excellent; first-class: originally a registry mark for ships.

[2]a (ā; when stressed, ā), indef.art. [<A.S. ān, one], 1, a contracted form of [1]an, used before an initial consonant sound or a sounded h; as, a man; a house; a hotel; a union; an egg; an hour; 2, (orig. a preposition: see [3]a), to, for, or in each; as, once a year.

[3]a (ə), prep. [<A.S. an, on], to; into; in; on; at: often felt to be the article; sometimes joined to the following word, with or without hyphen; as, once a month; *a*float; *a*fire; to go a-Maying.

a- prefix, 1, [<A.S. an, ou], on; at; to; toward; in; into; as, *a*foot; *a*shore; *a*side; *a*part; 2, [<A.S. ā-, ar-], up, out: also used as an intensive: cf. Ger. er-], up; out; away; as, *a*rise: often used intensively; as, *a*rouse; 3, [<A.S. of, af, off; away; of], of; as, *a*kin; 4, [<Lat. a, ab, before m, v], away; as, *a*vert; 5, [<O.F. a<Lat. a, ab, from], from; as, *a*bridge; 6, (also, an-), [<Gk. a-, an-, not], not; without; as, *a*pathy, *a*narchy.

a. abbr. 1, acre; 2, active; 3, adjective (also, adj.); 4, are (metric system); 5, anonymous (usually, anon.); 6, [Lat. ante], before:—A., 1, Academy; 2, adulteress; 3, America; American (also, Am.); 4, Artillery.

A. A. abbr. 1, Associate of Arts; 2, Antiaircraft Artillery:—A. A. A. A., American Amateur Athletic Association:—A. A. A. S., American Association for the Advancement of Science:—A. A. C., [Lat. anno ante Christum], in the year before Christ:—A. A. G., Assistant Adjutant General:—A. A. of A., Automobile Association of America.

aard-vark (ärd′=värk″), n. [<Du. aarde, earth +vark, pig], Zoöl., either of two ant-eating mammals (genus Orycteropus), with long snout and slimy tongue, and with forefeet fitted for burrowing: found in certain parts of Africa.

AARD-VARK (1/40)

aard-wolf (ärd′=wo͝olf″), n. [pl. -wolves (-wo͝olvz″)], [<Du. aarde, earth+wolf, wolf], Zoöl., a carnivorous, or flesh-eating, mammal (Proteles cristata) of South Africa, akin to the dogs, hyenas, and civets.

Aar-on (ăr′ŭn), n. [<L.L.<Gk.<Heb. Aharōn, perh. <hārōn, a mountaineer], Bib., the first high priest of the Hebrews, older brother of Moses.

Aar-on's rod Bib., the rod with which Aaron performed miracles (Num.17:8); Arch., a kind of molding: Aaron's-rod, any of various plants with blossoms on a long stem, as the goldenrod.

A. A. U. abbr. Amateur Athletic Union:—A. A. U. P., American Association of University Professors:—A. B., 1, [Lat. artium baccalaureus], Bachelor of Arts: the first academic degree in arts (also, B. A.); 2, able-bodied (also, a. b.): said of seamen.

ab- prefix, [<Lat. ab, from], [a- before m, v (amentia, avert); abs- before c, t (abscond, abstain)], 1, from; away; as, *ab*duct; 2, used intensively; as, *ab*sorb.

ab-a-ca (ăb′ə-kə; ä″bä-kä′), n. [native name], Manila hemp; also, the plant which produces it.

a-back (ə-băk′), adv. [<A.S. an, on + bæc, back], backward: said of sails when pressed back against a mast: taken aback, disconcerted.

ab-a-cus (ăb′ə-kŭs), n. [pl. abacuses (-kŭs-ĕz); abaci (-sī)], [Lat.<Gk. abax (abakos), a tablet, reckoning board], a device for counting, consisting of beads or balls strung on wires or rods set in a frame: Arch., the flat layer of stone placed on top of the capital of a column or pillar, next under, and supporting, the architrave (for illus. see architrave).

ONE FORM OF ABACUS

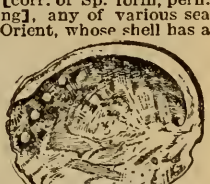
ab-a-lo-ne (ăb″ə-lō′nē), n. [corr. of Sp. form, perh. <Lat. ala, wing], any of various sea mollusks, used for food in the Orient, whose shell has a row of perforations along one rim, takes a high polish, and is used as an ornament and for making buttons and beads: so called in southern California.



ABALONE SHELL (1/3)

[1]a-ban-don (ə-băn′dŭn), v.t. [<O.F. abandoner<a, to+bandon, power], 1, to give up entirely; 2, to desert or forsake; 3, to give up all claim to; 4, to yield (oneself) without restraint, as to an impulse: Obs., 1, to subdue; control; 2, to banish; drive out; expel.—n. a-ban-don-ment.

Syn. leave, forsake, desert, renounce, relinquish, quit, forgo, surrender, resign, abdicate. Abandon, desert, forsake, and relinquish are alike in the idea of leaving. To abandon is to leave entirely, either from necessity; as, the crew abandoned the sinking ship; or from neglect or violation of duty; as, the mother abandoned her child; or by a surrender of self-control; as, he abandoned himself to dissipation. To desert is to leave by breaking the bonds of faithfulness or honor; as, he deserted his aged father; the soldier deserted his post. To forsake is to leave by ceasing to seek or stay with; as, he forsook all youthful companionship; my strength forsakes me in an emergency. To relinquish is to give up to another; as, he relinquished his claim to the property. Renounce relates especially to giving up some abstract thing, as an idea, a belief, a friendship. To forgo is to give up something valued, for the sake of a greater good or for the benefit of another. Resign and abdicate both have to do with the giving up of a position; but an elected officer resigns, while a king abdicates his throne. Surrender suggests giving up under compulsion.—Ant. keep, cherish, retain, hold, attain, adopt, maintain.

a-ban-doned (ə-băn′dŭnd), p.adj. [see abandon], 1, forsaken; deserted; given up entirely; 2, unrestrained; as, abandoned mirth; 3, shameless; wicked; as, an abandoned character.

Ab-a-ris (ăb'ā-rĭs), n. [Gk.], Gk. Myth., a sage and priest of Apollo, who lived without food, traveled on an arrow, and stayed a pestilence.

a-base (ā-bās'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. abased (-bāst'), p.pr. abasing], [< O.F. abaissier < Lat. ad, to + bassus, low or short], 1, to humble; degrade; 2, to cast down, as in rank or office; 3, to dishonor: Rare, to lower; depress; bring down.—n. a-base'ment.

Syn. humble, mortify, degrade, reduce, lower.

a-bash (ā-băsh'), v.t. [< O.F. esbaïr, to astonish < es (< Lat. ex) out + bahir, to cry bah! < bah, cry of astonishment], to put to shame; take away the self-possession of; humiliate; disconcert; put out of countenance.—n. a-bash'ment.

Syn. discomfit, humiliate, discompose. (See embarrass.)

a-bashed (ā-băsht'), p.adj. embarrassed; made to feel inferior; cast down; mortified.

a-bate (ā-bāt'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. abated, p.pr. abating], [< O.F. abatre < a, to + batre < Lat. batuere, to beat], to lessen, as in number, degree, force, or value: Law, to put an end to, as a nuisance; annul:—v.i. to decrease; moderate; subside; as, the storm abates.—n. a-bate'ment.—n. a-bat'er.—adj. a-bat'a-ble.

Syn. lessen, moderate, mitigate. (See decrease.)

II. GREEK AND ROMAN CLASSICAL ORDERS.

GREEK: Confined to temples and civic buildings.

A. Characteristics: 1, restraint, harmony of parts, perfection of proportion; 2, buildings rectangular, the overhanging, low-pitched, peaked roof being supported by a row, or rows, of slightly tapered, fluted pillars—typically Doric—extending completely around the building (page 683, B, C); 3, roof peaked and tiled; pediment often filled with sculptured reliefs (pages 715; 683, B); 4, no arches; 5, interiors relatively small and simply decorated; C, fixing of architectural orders: a, Doric: column without base, simple capital; entablature with plain architrave, frieze containing panels (often sculptured) between triglyphs, simple projecting cornice (page 683, A); b, Ionic: column with simple base of concave and convex moldings, capital ornamented with a volute, entablature with architrave of flat bands crowned by decorated molding, undivided frieze, simple cornice with carved moldings (page 683, F); c, Corinthian: base as Ionic but more elaborate, capital ornate with rows of acanthus leaves, entablature similar to Ionic, except that frieze was sometimes sculptured in relief (page 683, G).

B. Decoration: 1, relief carvings in pediments and on frieze; 2, color used on reliefs and elsewhere.

ROMAN: Exemplified in temples, civic buildings, baths, arenas, residences, aqueducts, etc.

A. Characteristics: 1, circular (page 683, H, I) as well as rectangular structures; 2, buildings more complex than Greek; 3, columns at end, or ends, of building only; 4, employment of arch, vault, and dome (page 683, I); 5, use of concrete and hard stucco; 6, adaptation, in less delicate and more ornate style, of Greek orders, especially Corinthian (page 683, J, K 2, 3 4), with some use of Tuscan (page 683, K 1), an unfluted style resembling Doric, and Composite (page 683, K 5), a combination of Corinthian and Ionic.

B. Decoration: 1, use of conventional ornaments in place of sculptured reliefs; 2, mural paintings of decorative character.

Modern architecture, since the 18th century, has revived the Greek and Roman types in their beauty and simplicity. Two recent examples are the Lincoln Memorial at Washington (1922), imitated from a Greek temple with the omission of the pediment (opposite, 9), and the Girard Trust Company's building in Philadelphia (1908), which shows the Roman Ionic with a dome inspired by the Pantheon (opposite, 2).

III. BYZANTINE ARCHITECTURE: Developed in Byzantium (Constantinople) in the 5th century A. D. Best seen in churches, based on the basilica plan of the Roman temple, but influenced by Oriental forms.

A. Characteristics: 1, the development of pendentives; 2, large central dome and often several smaller domes, buttressed without and supported within by arches rather than pillars (page 633, II, I); 3, square, oblong, or octagonal plan of building, without exterior decoration.

B. Decoration: 1, brilliantly colored mosaics and inlays of veined marble; 2, marble columns with richly and intricately carved capitals supporting vaults and arches (page 633, F, G).

IV. MOORISH ARCHITECTURE: Developed during the centuries (10th–15th) when Moorish civilization was at its height. Its mosques show kinship to the Byzantine churches.

A. Exterior Characteristics: 1, central dome with smaller domes, tapering at the top, in harmony with minarets and pointed arches; 2, rich and decorative marble inlay (opposite, 1, and cf. 6 for similarity of Byzantine).

B. Interior Decoration: 1, stucco and tiling in complex geometric patterns (page 633, A, E); 2, lacelike traceries in molded and colored plaster and pierced marble. The best example (opposite, 10, and page 633, A, B, C, D, E) is the Alhambra Palace at Granada.

V. ROMANESQUE ARCHITECTURE: Almost entirely ecclesiastical, developing from the early Christian basilica (see basilica, illus.), and reaching its height in the churches and monasteries of the 11th and 12th centuries.

A. Characteristics: 1, oblong nave with one or two aisles at each side (page 848, F); 2, elevated level of chancel end of church, to give space for crypt beneath; 3, round arch (page 848, C, I) associated with groined vault (page 848, B); 4, bell tower separate from church (opposite, 7); 5, the arcade, either to separate an aisle or inclose a cloister (see cloister, illus.), or as a decorative wall arcade (page 848, H).

B. Decoration: 1, porches adorned with heavy carved moldings in deep doorways, or with figure sculpture; 2, in interiors, richly carved moldings and massive columns, free or engaged (page 848, G, D); 3, capitals imitated from Corinthian, and carved with symbolic or grotesque figures; 4, complicated interlacing of groined roof vaults.

VI. NORMAN ARCHITECTURE: More precisely called English Romanesque of the 11th and 12th centuries; exemplified by Durham Cathedral.

A. Characteristics: 1, larger, narrower, and lower buildings than in continental Romanesque, usually on cruciform plan; 2, western entrance less used than side entrance with porch, called galilee (see galilee, illus.); 3, square tower rising from above crossing of nave and transept (page 663, I); 4, heavy masonry walls (page 663, B, C); 5, clustered piers supporting the arches (page 663, D, E, F, G, H, K).

B. Decoration: In general, very simple: 1, zigzag moldings; 2, primitive carvings on capitals, of animals or human faces.

VII. GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE: The outgrowth, in the 13th and 14th centuries, of the Romanesque. It was still chiefly ecclesiastical, though it appeared also in palaces, town halls, colleges, etc.

A. Characteristics: as seen in churches: 1, increase in height over the Romanesque (page 421, H); 2, ribbed vaulting (page 421, B, F, G); in England, fan vaulting; 3, development of the pointed arch (page 421, A, I); 4, buttress and flying buttress instead of heavy supporting walls and columns (page 421, A, II); 5, great stained-glass windows in wall space between buttresses; 6, two square towers at western end, sometimes completed with spires (page 421, E); often also a rood steeple over the crossing, replaced in England by the Norman tower.

B. Decoration: 1, ornamental stone tracery in lacelike patterns; 2, small ornamental spires on roofs and towers; 3, pointed, mullioned, and rose windows in stone tracery; 4, capitals, moldings, and doorway arches carved with symbolic, allegorical, or grotesque figures, varied by conventionalized plant and animal forms (page 421, C); 5, figures of sculptured saints and churchmen, set in niches (page 421, J).

Modern church architecture is reviving and adapting the Gothic style, as in the Cathedral of Saint John the Divine, New York, begun in 1892 (opposite, 11).

VIII. RENAISSANCE ARCHITECTURE: Developed in Italy in the 14th century, under the influence of the revival of classical learning, spreading throughout Europe, and lasting in varied forms till the 18th century. It was exemplified in churches, but more completely shown in palaces, villas, public halls, and other secular buildings. It was marked by a return to classic forms adapted to current uses.

A. Characteristics: 1, in churches, importance of dome (opposite, 3; page 822, D, E); 2, modification of classic details: a, cornice (page 822, F); b, column or pilaster, with capital founded on Corinthian (page 822, H); c, open pillared portico (page 822, D); 3, severe exteriors and flat, unbroken façades; 4, ceilings rather than vaulted roofs; later, the mansard roof; 5, windows set in ornamental rectangular frames.

B. Decoration: Rich and extravagant, an end in itself: 1, columns used rather for decoration than support; 2, decorative wrought iron work, balustrades, balconies (page 822, B, C, G).

C. The Rococo Phase (see illus. page 847): Climax of extravagant decoration in declining Renaissance art, characterized by: 1, heavy, ornate scrolls and moldings; 2, avoidance of straight lines; 3, excessive gilding and florid stucco work; 4, tasteless sculpture.

Rococo forms are illustrated more in adornment than in structure, being used for doorways, mantelpieces, decorative panels, etc.

IX. ORIENTAL ARCHITECTURE: The characteristic building form of China and Japan is the pagoda (opposite, 8, and page 685). It is frequently used as a temple, and is usually of wood, exquisitely or grotesquely carved, with a tiled roof of tentlike dip.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF ARMS AND ARMOR

THE story of the development of arms and armor is the story of changing methods of offense, requiring weapons, and of defense, requiring protective covering for the warrior. And the type of protection required has in every age depended largely upon the type of weapons used in attack. When the usual weapon was a stick or a stone, defense could be secured through a shield made by stitching the hide of an animal on a frame. At the other end of the story, only a trench, a bomb-proof shelter, or a gas mask furnishes protection from long range guns, air raids, and poison gas. But in the centuries between, such weapons as lance and spear and sword, crossbow and musket and pistol, demanded the complete outfits of armor for the body that we associate with the soldiers of ancient Assyria and Greece and Rome and with the knights of medieval and modern Europe.

Metal armor for the warrior made its appearance very early in history. An Egyptian monument of the age of the Pharaohs (1000 B. C.) shows a coat of bronze scale armor. Achilles and Hector and Homer's other warriors on the plains of "windy Troy" wore defensive armor of bronze. Chaldean and Assyrian soldiers of the seventh century B. C. wore helmets, round bucklers, and even coats of mail. Rome's metal-clad legions dreaded the attacks of metal-clad Scythians and Parthians or of panoplied Goths and Vandals; the coasts of Europe shivered at the raids of mailed Vikings; Charlemagne's paladins won their fame clad in chain mail, or in less enduring armor of leather, bone, or light metal plates. A distinct period in the history of European armor is marked by the development of chain armor, light, flexible, and very strong, used almost universally from the tenth to the fourteenth century of this era.

Chain armor, however, could not stand against the newer weapons: the crossbow, the longbow, and the first crude guns, found its vulnerable spots. From 1300 on, metal plate armor gradually appeared, forged in pieces to cover the knees, shoulders, and elbows, as well as the body proper; until, by the sixteenth century, the knight, tightly locked within his iron hide, was invisible alike to friend and foe, even his face being concealed by helmet and visor. Thus heraldic devices came to be engraved or emblazoned upon shield or surcoat, serving to identify the hidden knight—a fact often referred to in the accounts of the tournaments of Scott's heroes or King Arthur's knights.

The fifteenth and sixteenth centuries were the golden age of the plate-armored knight, armed with lance and sword, as he appears in the colored illustration and in its key on page 54. Such a knight was in himself an impregnable fort; his armor was forged by the clever armorer as a mold of the man inside, jointed to allow full and easy play of his muscles. Greater strength was gained by flutings and ridgings. Curved surfaces were cunningly employed to turn an opponent's lance harmlessly aside. The horse's trappings, the plumes on the knight's helmet, and the banner on his lance declared his identity; for a shield was no longer necessary. In the sixteenth century the metal plates were often no longer plain, but beautifully engraved with decorative designs or pictures.

The heat within this armor, lined with heavily padded garments, was intense; and its weight was most oppressive. An enormous jousting helm, with skull plate nearly a quarter of an inch thick, weighs about 26 pounds. A suit of armor made for Henry VIII comprising 235 pieces weighed 93 pounds. The jousting armor was much heavier than the war armor; in fact, so great was the weight of the former that the wearer required assistance to gain his mount. It is reputed that at well-regulated tournaments small scaffolds, stirrup-high, were provided, to which the knight was lifted by his armorer and a helper, and then transferred to his horse alongside.

The horse, certainly, was necessary to transport this elaborate structure; and the horse, too, had to be protected. So the craft of the armorer, by the sixteenth century, had extended to the equipment of the already overburdened steed. The metal coverings of head, neck, breast, and rump appear in the picture, as well as the gaily colored trapper that must have been so much in the animal's way.

In the late sixteenth and in the seventeenth century came the decadence of armor. As firearms became more efficient the plates had to become heavier, until their weight was too great to be supported, and they were piece by piece discarded. Decoration came to be a matter of etching and gilding on the surface. Conspicuous and decorative equipment that was all very well for a tournament proved impossible to endure in view of changing military tactics, with extended campaigns, long expeditions, and forced marches. By the eighteenth century common sense had learned the uselessness of armor, and the cloth uniform, often conspicuously and vividly colored, had replaced it. It has remained for the twentieth century to discover that the truest defense for a soldier in the field lies in the art of camouflage, or concealment through protective coloring.

ar-rear (ă-rēr′), n. [< M.E. (in) arere, (in) time past < Lat. ad, to + retro, backward], usually pl., that which is undone, outstanding, or unpaid; as, arrears in rent: Archaic, the rear, or hinder part: in arrears or in arrear, behindhand: in arrear of, behind.

beau-ti-ful (bū'tĭ-fo͝ol), adj. possessing qualities which delight the mind and senses; lovely.—adv. beau'ti-ful-ly.—n. beau'ti-ful-ness.
Syn. handsome, comely, lovely, fair, pretty. Beautiful denotes the possession of such qualities as delight the eye, ear, mind, and soul. A beautiful object possesses such delicacy of outline, exquisite color, or harmony of proportion as arouses pleasurable emotions in the beholder; a beautiful person adds to these outer graces the charm of spiritual loveliness. A noble thought, pleasing to the intellect, is beautiful; a holy act, pleasing to the moral sense, is beautiful. Handsome describes that which is symmetrical and well-proportioned; it does not necessarily include any idea of the beautiful; a handsome man might be a scoundrel, a hanasome house merely impressive. That is pretty which is attractive to the eye, ear, or mind in a dainty and diminutive way; pretty lacks the spiritual dignity of beautiful. Pretty is used often of things not small to express merely the idea that they are pleasing to the senses; as, a pretty room; a pretty cottage. Fair describes attractiveness based upon complexion and feature; that face is fair which is bright, smooth, and unblemished; hence, fair describes a superficial loveliness. Comely indicates an attractiveness in which a wholesome character and a rather full figure unite to produce a pleasing impression.—Ant. ugly, repulsive, hideous, homely, unattractive, unlovely.

Syn. faith, trust, conviction, persuasion, assurance, credence, credit. Belief is an act of the mind—the mental assent to something as true. It may be based on reasoning, but it is often the fruit of authority and, not uncommonly, of ignorance or prejudice. It is a general term, variously applicable. We may express our belief in an unproved theory, the truthfulness of a story, or the outcome of a new venture. We believe in things, but we extend our trust to people. Trust is an assured reliance, often instinctive, upon the truthfulness, honesty, or uprightness of another.

Faith is belief founded upon trust; faith is blindly sure of its object. It is applicable to both persons and things; we may have faith in the power of a physician, and in the virtue of the remedy he prescribes. Conviction is belief arrived at through reasoning confirmed by proof and evidence: consequently conviction is often a fixed belief not easily changed. Religiously, belief is assent to a given teaching, as, for instance, that there is a God. Trust goes further; trust not only believes, but, untroubled about the future, acts in the confidence that God will care for his children. Faith believes and trusts so fully that the outward conduct is governed by the inner light; the whole man is directed by his vision.—Ant. disbelief, distrust, doubt, unbelief.

TWENTY-FOUR TYPICAL BIRDS

BIRDS have always been a source of joy and of usefulness to man. The wild music of their songs, and the bright colors of their plumage, have made his world more beautiful; and their feeding habits have always contributed to his economic welfare. Birds are the chief line of defense against the insects, man's leading competitors for the earth's food supply. Without birds, successful agriculture would in a short time become impossible; indeed, the greater part of vegetation would be destroyed. Some birds protect man against disease by eating germ-carrying insects, such as flies and mosquitoes, or by acting as scavengers. Others eat weed seeds, literally by the ton. Still others, as the hawks and owls, keep down the rodents, especially the field mice which damage the farmer's crops. From others man derives eggs, flesh, and feathers for his sustenance or adornment. No group of animals meets more of his needs.

The brain of birds is well developed. The eyes are exceptionally keen, and the senses of taste and hearing very delicate. The most striking behavior of birds is seen in the care of the young, and in their migration. The care of the young includes nest-building, sitting on the eggs to hatch them, gathering food for the nestlings, and concealing and protecting them until they are able to care for themselves. The seasonal migrations of birds are greater and more striking than in the case of any other animal. As the food supply fails with the approach of winter they fly southward and winter in Central or South America, returning to their northern residence the next season with amazing regularity. Some birds nest within the Arctic Circle, and travel a third of the way around the globe to winter far south in the southern hemisphere.

The birds of North America are classified, according to their larger structural characteristics, into seventeen orders, as the Raptores, Passeres, Gallinæ, etc., and the birds within each order, according to external shape, color, size, etc., into successively smaller divisions called families, genera, species, and sometimes subspecies. Eleven of these orders, and one not containing any North American species, are represented on the plate.

The water and shore birds fall into nine orders, five of which are represented. The penguin (22), in the order of the diving birds with the grebes, loons, and auks, frequents the waters of the far south, about Cape Horn and the Cape of Good Hope. When on land it waddles awkwardly, or stands upright about three feet high; but in the water its movements are easy and graceful. Its wings have become mere flippers, useful as paddles in swimming under water but too small for flight. The herring gull (16) is familiar about our harbors. It belongs in the order of the long-winged swimmers, with the jaegers and terns. Its sailing flight is conspicuously graceful; and it often follows the ocean steamers to feed on the garbage. The mallard (21) belongs with the ducks, geese, and swans in the order Anseres, or flat-billed swimmers. It is found on inland waters, and is the probable ancestor of the domesticated ducks. The great blue heron (12), a wading bird, is classified with the spoonbills, storks, bitterns, and ibises, all of which have long legs, and long necks and beaks for reaching down and picking their food out of the water. The golden plover (23) is in the order Limicolæ, or shore dwellers, smaller than the herons, with the avocets, stilts, snipes, and sandpipers. It frequents marshy shores and exposed sand flats of the waterside, or, like a land bird, ranges over sandy hills and old fields, where it runs rapidly and easily on the ground.

Among the land birds, representatives of several orders have been domesticated. In the order Gallinæ, or scratchers, along with the turkey, grouse, and peacock, are the jungle fowl (18) and the bobwhite (19). The former is found in the jungles of India; it is believed to be the first domesticated fowl, the ancestor of the barnyard chicken; the bobwhite is familiar mainly through its cheery, whistling spring call. The mourning dove (5) belongs in an order (Columbæ) having but one family, from which are derived the domesticated varieties of pigeon. The ostrich (24), familiar in zoölogical gardens here, and in the domesticated state in the Old World, belongs with the emu and the apteryx in the order of the runners, not represented by any native species in North America.

The barn owl (13) and bald eagle (15) are members of the order Raptores, the tigers among the birds, built for strong flight and fierce combat. The barn owl is abroad mainly at night, and its odd, monkeylike face is seldom seen. The bald eagle has remarkably strong flight; it frequents wild locations near water, feeding mainly on dead fish. Eagles hunt in pairs; and it is said that they mate for life, and even that, if one of a pair is killed, the survivor will not mate a second time. The Pici, or woodpeckers, represented by the red-headed woodpecker (20), show highly specialized structure: the toes are arranged two forward and two backward for climbing on tree trunks; the tail feathers are stiff and pointed, and serve as a prop; the bill is stout and chisel-like and the neck muscles strong; and the tongue is remarkably long and distensible, with a horny, spearlike tip for drawing insects out of holes. The humming bird (1) and nighthawk (7) belong with the swifts. The former is found only in the New World; it is the tiniest of birds, no larger than some dusk-flying moths. The ruby-throated humming bird, shown in the plate, is the only species of eastern North America, though about 500 species are known, mainly in Central and tropical South America, where their colors are brighter. The nighthawk roosts during the day perched lengthwise on a limb, or on the ground. At night it flies erratically about, like a bat, hunting for insects, occasionally uttering a loud, nasal call note.

All the remaining birds shown belong to the great order of the Passeres, or perching birds, the largest and most widely distributed of all the orders, containing 18 families and about 7000 species and subspecies, or more than one half of all existing birds. Within this order are most of our common song birds. The wise crow (11), the English sparrow (8), and the robin (4) are familiar in every countryside. The shrike (2) is known for its habit of impaling its prey—mice, harmful insects, and sometimes small birds—on a thorn or sharp twig. The friendly, bustling house wren, with its perky tail and cheerful song, is a much loved visitor in many orchards and lawns; and its near cousin, the mockingbird (14), is famous as a songster and for the ability which it sometimes shows in imitating the songs of other birds. The cliff swallow (6) has the swift flight and peculiar build of the swallows, and is recognizable among its rather drab kindred by its relatively bright colors. The bobolink (3), an accomplished songster, and the brilliant redstart (10), whose name means "redtail," are representatives of a large family of small, often brightly colored, birds, the wood warblers. NOTE.—The original language of the Old Testament was Hebrew, with a few passages in Aramaic; of the Old Testament Apocrypha, Hebrew and Greek; and of the New Testament, Greek, with perhaps some Aramaic. The books of the Bible were written by many different authors and at different times. Those of the Old Testament, with or without the Apocrypha, had come to be regarded by the Jews as a single body of sacred writings by about A. D. 200; they were accepted in the Greek version by the Christians, who, however, came to regard certain writings of their own, whose limits were fixed by about the fourth century after Christ, as a New Testament, having equal or greater authority.

Important versions are as follows: Septuagint, a Greek version of the Old Testament and Apocrypha, made between the third and first centuries B. C., probably in Egypt; Vulgate, a Latin version of the Old Testament, with the Apocrypha, and the New Testament, made by St. Jerome about A. D. 400; Wyclife's Bible, the first English version of the whole Bible, translated from the Vulgate, 1382; Tyndale's English version of the New Testament and parts of the Old Testament, based on the Vulgate, Septuagint, and texts in the original languages, 1525; Coverdale's, the first translation of the whole Bible to be printed in English, 1535; Luther's German translation, 1535; Geneva Bible, also called Breeches Bible, a revision of earlier English translations prepared by English Puritans in exile at Geneva, 1560; Authorized Version, or King James Bible, another revision based on earlier English translations, which it generally and gradually supplanted in the use of English-speaking Protestants, being still in common use, 1611; Douay Bible, based on the Vulgate, and the accepted English version among Roman Catholics, 1609–10; Revised Version, a revision of the Authorized Version, based on the original texts as restored in the light of modern scholarship, 1881–85; American Revised Version, prepared at the same time as the above, but departing somewhat more freely from the Authorized Version, and not published till 1901.

The books of the Bible, including the Old Testament Apocrypha, are listed below, the names as familiar to Catholics through the Douay Bible following in parentheses whenever different from those commonly used.

Eng. < Fr. brave < It. bravo, bold], 1, bold; courageous; 2, making a fine show; handsome; 3, superior; excellent:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. braved (brāvd), p.pr. braving], to meet or face with courage; dare; defy:—n. 1, a North American Indian warrior; 2, a courageous man; 3, a bully.—adv. brave′ly.—n. brave′ness.

Syn., adj. valiant, daring, resolute, courageous, venturesome, chivalrous, dauntless, intrepid.

brav-er-y (brāv′ẽr-ĭ), n. [pl. -ies (-ĭz)], the quality of being fearless; gallantry; heroism: Archaic, bright show.

Syn. courage, gallantry, valor, chivalry, intrepidity, fortitude, heroism, prowess, pluck. These words agree in that they express resistance to some opposing power. Courage, the noblest word, names a quality that is deep-seated in the character. It acts in time of danger, but not only then; it is available always, and meets a physical attack with no less steadfastness than a spiritual struggle or a period of trying illness. Courage is the product of reason and a marshaled force of resistance; it is a bigger quality than bravery, which is more a matter of instinct. Bravery is fiery, perhaps even spectacular; but it is a more common trait than courage, is apparent at the moment of need or danger only, and follows rather than leads. Gallantry is bravery with the luster of dash upon it; it surpasses bravery, for it connotes the power of leadership. Intrepidity is fearless and undaunted; it is a cool, admirable trait. Heroism is passionate courage; heroism forgets self, whether exhibited in actual fighting or in the calm control of one facing death for a cause or a faith. Fortitude is akin to this last-mentioned quiet courage; fortitude is a steely endurance under adversity or pain; it is determined, unfaltering, patient. Valor combines the heat of bravery with the ability of courage to lead and endure; valor fights with dash, but prowess may defeat valor by adding to its characteristics that measure of skill which the valiant one either lacks, or is too impatient to exercise. Pluck is a spirited, confident resolution, especially against odds.

¹bra-vo (brä′vō), interj. [It.], well done! good!—n. [pl. -vos (-vōz)], a shout of applause.

busi-ness (bĭz'nĕs), n. [see busy], 1, that which occupies a person's time, effort, and attention; especially, the occupation from which one derives one's livelihood; occupation; profession; 2, something necessary to be done; a duty; mission; 3, concern; right to be interested or to act; as, he has no business to interfere; 4, affair; matter; as, the lawsuit was an unfortunate business; 5, a commercial enterprise; as, he owns his own business; 6, commercial pursuits in general; financial activities; 7, in the theater, actions or movements designed to occupy a pause, heighten an effect, or assist in the interpretation of character: Obs., the state of being busy:—adj. pertaining to commercial pursuits.—adj. busi'ness-like″.

Syn., n. trade, craft, commerce, profession, occupation, employment, pursuit, calling. Business is an interest, regularly pursued for pecuniary gain or to secure a livelihood. Collectively, business names those mercantile interests that require ability in the keeping of accounts, the management of finances, and the carrying on of money transactions. Commerce is business on a large scale. Trade designates the business of buying and selling goods, whether on a large or small basis; it may be applied to a much smaller unit than commerce. Thus we speak of interstate commerce, or world trade, but we may also speak of the trade of a hamlet. Trade in its special sense names a business carried on for gain; a trade is a business dependent on manual dexterity, and is distinguished from farming, commerce, the professions, the arts, and unskilled labor; a plumber or a carpenter has a trade. A trade highly specialized, and tending toward the artistic in its application of manual skill, becomes a craft; a worker in brass has a craft. Collectively, both trade and craft name all those skilled in a particular kind of work. An occupation is that at which one is busy or in which one is absorbed; it may be for any purpose, from a means of making a living to a method of passing the time. A pursuit is an occupation followed with eager interest. A profession requires scholarship and learning; it connotes frequently the idea and the ideal of serving others, even though, like business, its primary aim is the earning of a livelihood. Employment has come to have a wide range of meaning; it can refer to one's regular occupation or profession; more commonly, it refers to work done for pay in the service of another. A calling is an occupation to which one is attracted by something within himself, as a sense of duty, or a love of the life involved. Loosely, calling is applied to any occupation; collectively, it names all those engaged in a particular occupation.

bus-y (biz'i), adj. [comp. busier, superl. busiest], [< A.S. bisig, busy], 1, earnestly, actively, or closely, at work; 2, characteristic of, or pertaining to, industry or diligence; as, the busy hum of the factory; 3, bustling; full of activities; as, a busy day; 4, in use, as a telephone line; 5, meddlesome; prying:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. busied (-id), p.pr. busying], to keep constantly engaged; occupy.—adv. bus'i-ly.

Syn., adj. active, diligent, engaged, employed, sedulous, industrious, assiduous, persevering, occupied. Busy means keeping at what one has to do, often in a vigorously active fashion. It also describes one who has much to do; as, he is a busy man. Sometimes it carries the sense of occupied; as, the editor is too busy to see you. Industrious describes one who is habitually and zealously busy, usually to some productive end. Busy frequently relates to the active calls of everyday life; industrious applies to either the physical or the mental field. The industrious worker applies himself closely that he may waste no time; the diligent worker concentrates through love of his work. Diligent describes usually those following mental pursuits, but it is also applied to that whole-hearted adherence to principle made evident in works, whether good or bad; as, he is a diligent Christian; she is a diligent collector of gossip. One engaged is occupied; he can start nothing new until he finishes what he is about. An assiduous person refuses to be exhausted till the end of his task. Sedulous also describes a persevering sort of application; a sedulous worker is absorbed until his stint is done.—Ant., adj. idle, inactive, indolent, lazy, procrastinating.

ca-jol-er-y (kā-jōl'ĕr-ĭ), n. [pl. -ies (-Iz)], the act of deceiving through flattery; wheedling.

cake (kāk), n. [O.N. kaka, cake], 1, a small mass of dough, sweetened and baked; 2, a small portion of batter cooked on a griddle; a pancake; 3, any compressed or solidified mass, especially if thin or flat: cake urchin, a sand dollar (see Echinodermata, illus.):—r.t. [p.t. and p.p. caked (kākt), p.pr. caking], to form into a hard mass:—r.i. to harden.

cake-walk (kāk'wôk"), n. among American Negroes, a competitive promenade characterized by pompous steps and postures, with a cake as prize:—r.i. to walk pompously or affectedly.

cal. abbr. 1, calendar; 2, small calorie:—Cal., 1, California (officially, Calif.); 2, large calorie.

cal-a-bar (kăl'ā-bär), n. [prob. < Fr. Calabre, Calabria], the gray fur and skin of a Siberian squirrel. Also, cal'a-ber (-bĕr).

cal-a-bash (kăl'ā-băsh), n. [< Fr calebasse < Sp. calabaza, a gourd < Pers. kharbuza, melon], 1, a tree (Crescentia cujete) of tropical America, bearing a gourdlike fruit with a hard shell; 2, its fruit; 3, a vessel or implement made from the dried shell.

cal-a-boose (kăl"ā-bōōs'), n. [< Sp. calabozo, dungeon], U. S. Slang, a jail; lockup.

cal-a-man-co (kăl"ā-măng'kō), n. [pl. -coes (-kōz)], [source uncertain], 1, a glossy, satin-twilled woolen material made in Flanders; 2, a garment made of this material.

cal-a-mine (kăl'ā-mīn; kăl'ā-mĭn), n. [< L.L. calamina < Lat. cadmia, calamine: see cadmium], a white or blue-green mineral, an important ore of zinc; zinc silicate: found in crystals and stalactites and used in coloring pottery: also called zinc spar.

ca-lam-i-tous (kă-lăm'ĭ-tŭs), adj. [see calamity], resulting in or from disaster; disastrous.—adv. ca-lam'i-tous-ly.—n. ca-lam'i-tous-ness.

ca-lam-i-ty (kă-lăm'ĭ-tĭ), n. [pl. -ties (-tĭz)], [< Lat. calamitas, misfortune], 1, any cause that produces evil or disaster; 2, distress; affliction.

Syn. accident, disaster, affliction. (See trouble.)

cal-a-mus (kăl'ā-mŭs), n. [pl. calami (-mī)], [Lat. = reed], 1, a slender, climbing palm, producing rattan canes, etc.; 2, the sweet flag; 3, a flute, pipe, etc., made of the calamus palm: Ornith., the tube or quill of a feather (see feather, illus.).

ca-lan-do (kä-län'dō), adj. [It.], Mus., gradually diminishing in rapidity and volume.

ca-lash (kă-lăsh'), n. [< Fr. calèche < Slav. source], 1, a light carriage with low wheels and a folding top: also called calèche; 2, the folding top of such a carriage; 3, a large hood supported on hoops, formerly worn by Englishwomen.

cal-car (kăl'kär), n. [-cars (-kärz); -caria (-kā'rĭ-ā)], [Lat. = spur], Zoöl. and Bot., a spurlike projection, as from a bird's claw or the base of a petal.

cal-ca-re-ous (kăl-kā'rē-ŭs), adj. [< Lat. calcarius, pertaining to lime < calx, lime], like, or containing, carbonate of lime, as animal skeletons.

cal-ce-o-la-ri-a (kăl"sē-ō-lā'rĭ-ā), n. [< Lat. calceolus, a slipper], Bot., any of a genus (Calceolaria) of tropical American plants of the figwort family, cultivated for their showy, pouch-shaped flowers: also called slipperwort.—adj. cal'ce-o-late.

Cal-chas (kăl'kăs), n. [< Gk.], Gk. Myth., the wisest prophet among the Greeks at Troy.

cal-cif-er-ous (kăl-sĭf'ĕr-ŭs), adj. [< Lat. calx (calcis), lime + ferre, to bear], containing carbonate of lime, as certain rocks.—adj. cal-cif'ic.

cal-ci-fy (kăl'sĭ-fī), r.t. [p.t. and p.p. -fied (-fīd), p.pr. -fying], [< Lat. calx (calcis), lime + Fr. -fier < Lat. facere, to make], to make hard by the addition of lime:—r.i. to become hard by the addition of lime.

cal-ci-mine (kăl'sĭ-mīn; -mĭn), n. [< Lat. calx (calcis), lime], a white or tinted wash of slaked lime and water for walls or ceilings:—r.t. [p.t. and p.p. -mined (-mīnd; -mĭnd), p.pr. -mining], to cover with such a wash. Also, kal'so-mine.

cal-cine (kăl-sīn'; kăl'sĭn), r.t. [p.t. and p.p. calcined (-sīnd'; -sĭnd), p.pr. calcining], [< L.L. calcinare, to reduce to calx, a limelike powder], to subject to the action of dry heat, in order to reduce to a friable or powdery condition:—r.i. to become powder under the influence of heat.—n. cal"ci-na'tion.

cal-cite (kăl'sīt), n. [< Lat. calx (calcis), lime], a native calcium carbonate, also called calc spar, occurring in many crystalline forms, such as chalk, marble, etc., a colorless, transparent variety, known as Iceland spar, being used in optical apparatus.

cal-ci-um (kăl'sĭ-ŭm), n. Chem., a soft, lustrous, metallic element [symbol Ca], widely distributed in nature in combination, as in lime, marble, chalk, etc.: calcium carbide, a compound of calcium and carbon which, when combined with water, gives off acetylene gas: calcium chloride, a compound of calcium and chlorine, used as a disinfectant and germicide, and as a drying agent: calcium light, an intense white light, made by directing an oxyhydrogen flame against lime: also called limelight.

cal-cog-ra-phy (kăl-kŏg'rā-fĭ), n. [< Lat. calx (calcis), lime, chalk + Gk. graphein, to write], the art of drawing with black or colored crayons.—n. cal-cog'ra-pher.—adj. cal-co-graph'ic.

cal-cu-la-ble (kăl'kū-lā-bl), adj. [see calculate], capable of being determined or reckoned.—adv. cal'cu-la-bly.—n. cal'cu-la-bil'i-ty.

cal-cu-late (kăl'kū-lāt), r.t. [p.t. and p.p. -lated, p.pr. -lating], [< Lat. calculare (-atus), to reckon with pebbles < calculus, a pebble], 1, to find out, or make certain of, by mathematics; reckon; 2, to determine by any process of reasoning; estimate: Colloq., to suppose:—r.i. 1, to make a computation; 2, to reach a conclusion by a reasoning process; 3, to rely: with on or upon: as, to calculate on success: calculated, p.adj. fitted; adapted; suitable.

Syn. compute, number, estimate, rate. To number is to count an aggregate of things item by item, or one by one. To calculate, estimate, and compute are alike in the idea of arriving at a quantity or result by operations with figures or mathematical symbols according to certain principles. To calculate denotes operating in any way with numbers or symbols, but it specifically indicates the higher or more complicated mathematical processes, such as those used by astronomers. To estimate is to secure a quantity or sum by a comprehensive judgment of the values involved; since opinion or incomplete data are the bases of an estimate, the result is approximate, but it serves its purpose; as, the contractor estimated the cost of a new Union Station. To compute is to make a numerical calculation; also, to reckon separately the items involved; compute is used of more accurate and certain operations than estimate, though one may also compute the probable or approximate. To rate is to fix a relative value by comparison, or by reasoning from a known quantity to an unknown; as, judging from his expenditures, I would rate Mr. H. as a rich man.

cal-cu-la-tion (kăl″kū-lā′shŭn), n. 1, mathematical reckoning or its result; 2, any process of reasoning or its result: an inference; estimate.

cal-cu-la-tive (kăl′kū-lā-tĭv), adj. 1, of or pertaining to mathematical or other reasoning; 2, inclined to calculation.

cal-cu-la-tor (kăl′kū-lā″tēr), n. one who, or a machine which, computes or reckons.

cal-cu-lous (kăl′kū-lŭs), adj. [< Lat. calculus, pebble], stony; gritty: Med., resulting from, indicating, or affected with, a calculus, or stone in the kidneys, bladder, or gall bladder.

cal-cu-lus (kăl′kū-lŭs), n. [pl. calculi (-lī)], Math., any one of several highly developed methods of treating problems, each method using a peculiar system of algebraic notation; especially, differential calculus, which treats of the rates of change of variables and affords methods of finding tangents to curves, maximum and minimum values, etc.; and integral calculus, which treats of the limiting values of certain series of terms, called differentials, and affords a method for finding areas, lengths, volumes, etc.; Pathol., a hard, inorganic formation within some organ of the body, as in the kidneys, bladder, or gall bladder, the most commonly known form being gallstone.

cal-de-ra (kăl-dā′rä), n. [Sp. = caldron], Geol., a craterlike basin produced by a great explosion, as from a volcano.

cal-dron (kôl′drŭn), n. [< M.E. caudron < Lat. cal-daria, a hot-water kettle < calidus, warm], a large kettle or boiler. Also, Br., caul′dron.

ca-lèche (kȧ″lăsh′), n. [Fr. < Slav.], a light, covered carriage. See ca-lash′, Pfd. S.

Cal-e-do-ni-an (kăl″ē-dō′nĭ-ăn), adj. [< Lat. Caledonia, ancient name for Scotland], Poet., Scotch; Scottish:—n. a native of Scotland.

cal-e-fy (kăl′ē-fī), v.t. and v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -fied (-fīd), p.pr. -fying], [< Lat. calēre, to be warm + Fr. -fier < Lat. facere, to make], to make or become hot or warm.—n. cal″e-fac′tion.—n. cal″e-fac′to-ry.—adj. and n. cal″e-fa′cient (-fā′shĕnt).

cal-en-dar (kăl′ĕn-dȧr), n. [< O.F. calendier < Lat. calendarium, an account book < kalendae, the first, or reckoning, day of the month], 1, a method of reckoning time, especially as to the length and divisions of a year; 2, an orderly, tabular arrangement of the days, weeks, and months of the year; a printed card or set of sheets of paper showing such tabular arrangement; 3, an almanac; 4, a register or list: Law, a list of cases set for trial in court: Obs., a pattern:—v.t. to register or place on a list. Also, kal′en-dar.

[1]cal-en-der (kăl′ĕn-dĕr), n. [< Fr. calandre < L.L. cclendra, corr. of Lat. cylindrus, a cylinder], a series of heated rolls between which paper or cloth is passed to give it a smooth, hard, and sometimes glossy surface:—v.t. to press in a smoothing machine, as paper or cloth.

[2]cal-en-der (kăl′ĕn-dĕr), n. [< Pers. qalander], in Persia and Turkey, a dervish of a certain itinerant and mendicant order.

cal-ends (kăl′ĕndz), n.pl. [< Lat. kalendae, first of month], in ancient Rome, the first day of the month. Also, kal′ends.—adj. ca-len′dal.

ca-len-du-la (kȧ-lĕn′dū-lȧ), n. [< Lat. kalendae, first of month: flowers bloom almost every month], Bot., any of a genus (Calendula) of plants of the composite family, including the pot marigold (C. officinalis), cultivated for their showy yellow flowers.

cal-en-ture (kăl′ĕn-tūr), n. [< Sp. calentura, fever < Lat. calēre, to be hot], a fever resulting from exposure to extreme heat, which attacks persons in tropical countries, especially on shipboard.

ca-le-sa (kä-lā′sä), n. [Sp. = calash], in Spanish-speaking countries, a calash; cab.

ca-les-cence (kȧ-lĕs′ĕns), n. [< Lat. calēre, to be hot], increasing warmth; a state of growing heat.—adj. ca-les′cent.

[1]calf (kăf), n. [pl. calves (kăvz)], [< A.S. cealf, calf], 1, the young of the cow or of a kindred species of mammal; 2, the young of other large mammals, as the whale, elephant, etc.; 3, leather made from the skin of a calf; 4, a mass of ice breaking from an iceberg: Colloq., an awkward, bashful, immature youth.

[2]calf (kăf), n. [pl. calves (kăvz)], [< O.N. kalfi, calf of leg], the thick, fleshy hinder part of the human leg between the knee and ankle.

calf-skin (kăf′skĭn″), n. [[1]calf + skin], 1, the skin of a calf; 2, leather from the skin of a calf.

Cal-i-ban (kăl′ĭ-băn), n. [prob. var. of cannibal, q.v.], in Shakespeare's "Tempest," a savage and brutish slave of Prospero.

cal-i-ber (kăl′ĭ-bēr), n. [< Fr. calibre < It. calibro, perh. < Arab. qālib, mold], 1, the diameter of the inside of a cylinder or tube, or, sometimes, of any round body; 2, especially, the inside diameter of the barrel of a cannon, gun, or the like, expressed in inches, hundredths of an inch, millimeters, etc.; 3, mental capacity or intellectual power. Also, cal′i-bre (-bēr).

cal-i-brate (kăl′ĭ-brāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -brated, p.pr. -brating], 1, to find the diameter of, as a tube or gun barrel; 2, to lay out an accurately graduated scale on, or to correct the scale readings of (a measuring instrument), so as to secure accuracy of measurement.—n. cal′i-bra″tor.—n. cal″i-bra′tion.

ca-li-che (kä-lē′chä), n. [Sp. = a pebble in a brick], native sodium nitrate, found in large beds in Chile: used as fertilizer and in various chemical manufactures, as of nitric acid.

cal-i-co (kăl′ĭ-kō), n. [pl. -coes or -cos (-kōz)], [< Calicut, town in India whence cloth was first brought to England], a kind of cotton cloth, usually printed; in England, usually, plain white cotton cloth:—adj. made of, or similar to, calico.

cal-i-co bass (bȧs), in the United States, an edible fresh-water fish (Pomoxis sparoides) akin to the sunfishes: so called because of its variegated colors: also called strawberry bass and lamplighter.

cal-i-co bush the mountain laurel (Kalmia latifolia) of the United States.

Calif. abbr. the official abbreviation for the State of California.

ca-lig-i-nous (kȧ-lĭj′ĭ-nŭs), adj. [< Lat. caligo (-inis), darkness], Archaic, dim.

ca-lig-ra-phy (kȧ-lĭg′rȧ-fĭ), n. [see calligraphy], beautiful writing or the art of producing it: incorrect variant of cal-lig′ra-phy, Pfd. S.

cal-i-man-co (kăl″ĭ-măng′kō), n. [pl. -coes (-kōz)], [source uncertain], a woolen cloth made in Flanders. See cal″a-man′co, Pfd. S.

cal-i-pash (kăl′ĭ-păsh; kăl″ĭ-păsh′), n. [perh. W. Ind. corr. of carapace, turtle's shell], a fatty green substance found under the upper shell of a turtle: considered a delicacy. Also, cal′li-pash.

cal-i-pee (kăl′ĭ-pē; kăl″ĭ-pē′), n. [< calipash], a fatty yellow substance lying against the lower shell of a turtle, used as food. Also, cal′li-pee.

cal-i-per (kăl′ĭ-pēr), n. [corr. of caliber, q.v.], an instrument with two adjustable jaws or legs, used in determining diameters, or the like: often pl. (cf. illus. under micrometer caliper):—v.t. and v.i. to measure with calipers. Also, cal′li-per.

CALIPERS

ca-liph (kā′lĭf; kăl′ĭf), n. [< Fr. caliphe < Arab. khalīfah, successor (to Mohammed)], among the Mohammedans, one having supreme power in religion and government: title of the sultans of Turkey before 1920, when the republic was established. Also, ca′lif; ka′lif; kha′lif; kha′liff.

can-cel (kăn'sĕl), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -celed or -celled (-sĕld), p.pr. -celing or -celling], [< Fr. canceller, to make lines across like latticework < Lat. cancelli, lattice], 1, to deface, as writing, by drawing lines across it; 2, to mark or stamp so as to render valueless, as a stamp; 3, to annul or make void, as a promissory note or a contract; 4, to withdraw, as an order for goods: Math., to remove (a common factor) from both numerator and denominator of a fraction: usually with out:—n. Print., the striking out of matter already printed or in type; also, the matter struck out; Mus., the sign (♮); a natural (see page 1170).

Syn., v. annul, repeal, revoke, abolish, abrogate, nullify, obliterate, expunge, efface, annihilate. The idea common to all these words is that of setting aside a law, obligation, custom, decision, etc., that has been in force. To annul is to make invalid or not binding; a marriage contract made by minors without the consent of their parents may be annulled. To cancel is a kind of annulling; deeds, bonds, agreements, private obligations, such as debt, are literally struck out when they are canceled. To abolish is to bring to a complete end either by direct action, as the legislature abolished child labor; or gradually and indirectly, as is necessary in the case of a custom or convention. To abrogate, repeal, revoke, and nullify apply especially to the setting aside of laws. To abrogate is to make void by act of a legislative body; a later law, by conflicting with it, may abrogate an earlier one. To repeal is to unmake a law; a law can be repealed only by the body that enacted it. To revoke is to take back a power or privilege once extended; a sovereign, or other individual in power, revokes. To nullify may be to deprive of force by inaction, or by a specific neutralizing act. (See erase.)

can-dor (kăn'dĕr), n. [Lat. = whiteness], 1, frankness; outspokenness; 2, fairness; as, to judge with candor. Also, can'dour.

Syn. frankness, openness, ingenuousness, sincerity, impartiality, fairness, simplicity, unreserve. These words are alike in that they are forms of outspokenness in speech. Candor is based upon the speaker's intention to be fair and truthful; it is impartial, without self-interest, and unreserved. Candor is usually appreciated; frankness frequently is not. Frankness consists in saying what one thinks; it is often the fruit of a warm-hearted impulse, and is not seldom a courageous form of truthtelling; but it is as apt to offend as to please. Openness is even freer in making disclosures than frankness; frankness, while free, may have reserves; openness reserves nothing; hence it is often indiscreet, if not actually offensive. Ingenuousness is a naïve disclosure of the whole matter involved, whether it be for or against the speaker so to declare himself: ingenuousness is artless, and appealingly without guile or pretense. Sincerity is the quality of meaning exactly what one says, whatever that may be; sincerity is convincing, and is more often valued than resented.—Ant. reticence, reserve, hypocrisy.

can-dy (kăn'dĭ), n. [pl. -dies (-dĭz)], [< Fr. car·a·bi·neer (kăr'ə·bĭ·nēr'), n. a soldier, usually mounted, who carries a short rifle. Also, car'a·bi·nier'; car'bi·neer'.

car·ack (kăr'ăk), n. [< O.F. carraque < L.L. carraca (naris), laden (ship)], from the 15th to the 17th century, a large Portuguese or Spanish merchant ship, equipped for fighting: also called galleon (which see for illus.). Also, car'rack.

car·a·cole (kăr'ə·kōl), n. [< Fr. caracol(e) < It caracollo < Sp. caracol, spiral shell], in horsemanship, a half turn to the right or left:—v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -coled (-kōld), p.pr. -coling], to move one's horse in such a way; wheel. Also, car'a·col (-kōl).

ca·ra·cul (kə'rə·kōōl'; popularly, kăr'ə·kŭl), n. [see karakul], a valuable fur made from the skins of young lambs. See ka'ra·kul', Pfd. S.

ca-rafe (kȧ-rȧf′), n. [Fr. < It. caraffa or Sp. garrafa, a cooler, perh. < Arab. gharafa, to draw water], a glass water bottle for the table; a decanter.

car-a-geen (kăr′ȧ-gēn″), n. [see carrageen], an edible seaweed. See car′ra-geen″, Pfd. S.

car-a-mel (kăr′ȧ-mĕl), n. [Fr. = burnt sugar < L.L. calamellus, sugar cane], 1, burnt sugar, used for coloring foods or as a flavoring; 2, a kind of candy, generally cut into cubes, containing burnt sugar.

car-a-pace (kăr′ȧ-pās), n. [Fr. < Sp. carapacho, a carapace], Zoöl., the hard upper shell of a turtle, lobster, crab, etc. Also, car′a-pax (-păks).

car-at (kăr′ȧt), n. [Fr. < It. carato < Arab. qīrāt, a carat < Gk. keration, carob tree seed; carat: dim. of keras, horn], 1, a unit of weight for precious stones and, sometimes, precious metals: in international trade, one fifth of a gram; 2, a twenty-fourth part: a term used to express the fineness of gold used by jewelers; as, gold of 22 carats contains 22 parts of pure gold and 2 of copper or silver. Also, kar′at.

car-a-van (kăr′ȧ-văn; kăr″ȧ-văn′), n. [< 16th-cent. Eng. carouan < Pers. karwān, a caravan], 1, in the Orient, a company traveling together for safety, especially across the desert; 2, figuratively, any large number of persons journeying together; 3, a large covered wagon; a van.

car-a-van-sa-ry (kăr″ȧ-văn′sȧ-rĭ), n. [pl. -ries (-rĭz)], [< Pers. karwān, caravan + sarāi, mansion; inn], 1, in the Orient, a kind of inn with a spacious court, where caravans rest at night; 2, a large hotel. Also, car″a-van′se-rai (-sē-rī).

car-a-vel (kăr′ȧ-vĕl), n. [< Fr. caravelle < It. caravella, caravel < L.L. < Gk. karabos, coracle], from the 15th to the 17th century, a small, fast, Spanish or Portuguese sailing vessel, such as was used by Columbus, having a high, narrow poop and three-cornered sails. Also, car′vel.

car-a-way (kăr′ȧ-wā), n. [< Sp. alcarahueya < Arab. al-karawiyā, the caraway plant], a biennial plant of the parsley family, bearing small, spicy fruits, called seeds, which are used for flavoring foods, as bread, cakes, and candy.

car-bide (kär′bīd; -bĭd), n. [see carbon], Chem., a compound of carbon with a metal; specifically, calcium carbide, used to make acetylene gas.

car-bine (kär′bĭn), n. [< Fr. carabine: source uncertain], 1, formerly, a light harquebus; 2, later, a short rifle used chiefly by cavalry. Also, car′a-bin (-bĭn); car′a-bine (-bīn).

car-bi-neer (kär″bĭ-nēr′), n. a soldier, usually mounted, armed with a carbine, or short rifle. Also, car″a-bi-neer′, Pfd. S.

car-bo-hy-drate (kär″bō-hī′drāt), n. [carbo(n) + hydrate], Chem., a compound, as sugar, starch, or cellulose, of carbon with hydrogen and oxygen, the latter in the same proportion as in water.

car-bo-lat-ed (kär′bō-lāt″ĕd), adj. [see carbolic], treated with carbolic acid.

car-bol-ic (kär-bŏl′ĭk), adj. [< Lat. carbo, charcoal + oleum, oil], Chem., designating, or pertaining to, a weak acid, also called phenic acid, or phenol, obtained from coal tar and other substances, and used dissolved in water as a disinfectant and germicide.

car-bo-lize (kär′bō-līz), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -lized (-līzd), p.pr. -lizing], to treat or impregnate with carbolic acid.

car-bon (kär′bŏn), n. [< Fr. carbone < Lat. carbo, charcoal], Chem., a nonmetallic element [symbol C] occurring in nature as the diamond and as graphite, and found in combination in many minerals and in all animal and vegetable substances, from which, by the action of heat, it may be obtained in the form of charcoal, lampblack, coke, etc.; Elec., one of two rods of hard carbon used as the terminals between which the current passes in an arc light: carbon copy, a copy of a written sheet made by the use of carbon paper: carbon paper, paper coated with coloring matter that adheres, upon pressure, to paper placed beneath it.

car-bo-na-ceous (kär″bō-nā′shŭs), adj. pertaining to, or containing, carbon.

Car-bo-na-ri (kär″bō-nä′rē), n.pl. [sing. -naro (-rō)], [It. < Lat. carbonarius, a charcoal burner: from the disguise they used], in the early 19th century, the members of a secret political society in Naples, Italy, whose aim was to free their country from foreign rule.—n. Car″bo-na′rism.

car-bon-ate (kär′bŏn-āt), n. [see carbon], Chem., a salt formed by the union of carbonic acid with a base:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -ated, p.pr. -ating], to charge with carbonic-acid gas.—n. car″bon-a′tion.

car-bon bi-sul-phide (bī-sŭl′fīd; -fĭd), Chem., a colorless, inflammable liquid, a compound of carbon and sulphur: used as a solvent for gums and rubber, and as an insecticide.

car-bon di-ox-ide (dī-ŏk′sīd; dī-ŏk′sĭd), Chem., a heavy, suffocating, colorless gas produced by burning carbonaceous material, etc.: also called carbonic-acid gas or carbonic acid.

car-bon-ic (kär-bŏn′ĭk), adj. Chem., pertaining to carbon: carbonic acid, 1, an acid composed of hydrogen, oxygen, and carbon, existing only in aqueous solution, and readily broken up into water and carbon dioxide; 2, hence, often, carbon dioxide.

car-bon-if-er-ous (kär″bŏn-ĭf′ĕr-ŭs), adj. [< Lat. carbo, charcoal + ferre, to bear], containing or yielding carbon or coal: Carboniferous, Geol., designating that portion of the Paleozoic following the Devonian and associated with coal-bearing rocks.

car-bon-ize (kär′bŏn-īz), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -ized (-īzd), p.pr. -izing], [see carbon], 1, to char; drive off all but a residue of carbon from, as by heat or acid; 2, to coat, impregnate, or combine with carbon.

car-bon mon-ox-ide (mŏn-ŏk′sīd; -sĭd), Chem., a colorless, odorless, poisonous gas, composed of carbon and oxygen, present in coal gas, and produced by the imperfect combustion of carbonaceous matter, as coal, charcoal, or gasoline.

car-bo-run-dum (kär″bō-rŭn′dŭm), n. [carbo(n) + (co)rundum, a trade name], a crystalline artificial compound of carbon and silicon, harder than emery, used as an abrasive and refractory.

car-boy (kär′boi), n. [< Pers. qarāboh, flagon], a large glass bottle, usually protected by basketwork, used as a container for corrosive acids.

car-bun-cle (kär′bŭng-kl), n. [< O.F. charbucle < Lat. carbunculus, gem; tumor: dim. of carbo, charcoal], Mineral., an iron-aluminum garnet; a deep red garnet cut without facets; Pathol., a localized inflammation of the skin and deeper tissues, having several openings exuding pus.

car-bu-rant (kär′bū-rănt), n. [carb(on) + (sulph)ur], a substance, usually a hydrocarbon, added to gas to increase carbon content and, hence, energy available for light or heat.—n. car′bu-ret″ant.

car-bu-ret (kär′bū-rĕt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -reted or -retted, p.pr. -reting or -retting], Chem., to combine with carbon or a hydrocarbon; carburize.—n. car″bu-re′tion (-rēsh′ŭn).

car-bu-ret-or (kär′bū-rĕt″ĕr), n. 1, a device for combining carbon, or a hydrocarbon, with nonluminous gases, for the production of greater illuminating power or of heat energy; 2, an accessory apparatus of an internal-combustion engine in which air is mixed with a liquid hydrocarbon, such as gasoline, in the form of vapor or spray, to produce a combustible or explosive mixture. Also, car′bu-ret″er; car′bu-ret″ter; car′bu-ret″tor.

ONE FORM OF DOWN-DRAFT AUTOMOBILE CARBURETOR

Gasoline enters at 1 and passes into float chamber 2, float 3, acting through lever 4 and needle valve 5, regulating the flow. Gasoline then flows through passage 6 in jet tube 7, whence, by air entering at 8 and passing check valve 9 (partially closed when starting motor), it is drawn from jet opening in Venturi tube 10, vaporized, and mixed with air to form a highly explosive gas which passes into motor through throttle valve 11. Hand and foot accelerator levers operate butterfly throttle lever 12. An auxiliary pump for quick pickup, connected through lever rod 13 and lever arm 14 to pump piston 15, forces a small amount of raw gasoline through opening 16 into Venturi tube. For idling speed with throttle nearly closed, gasoline passes from float chamber to idling tube 17, thence through tube 18 to idling jet 19, just below butterfly valve when closed. Adjustment screw 20 regulates flow of gasoline through idling jet at low speeds.

car-bu-rize (kär'bû-rīz), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -rized (-rīzd), p.pr. -rizing], 1, Metal., to treat, as iron, in such a way that the surface is made to contain an increased amount of carbon; 2, to combine carbon with; charge with fine particles of carbon or a hydrocarbon, as by means of a carburetor. —n. car'bu-riz'er.—n. car'bu-ri-za'tion.

car-ca-jou (kär'kȧ-jōō; -zhōō), n. [< Amer. Ind. name], the wolverene, or glutton.

car-cass (kär'kȧs), n. [pl. carcasses (-ēz)], [< O.F. charcois < L.L. carcosium, carcass; and < Fr. carcasse < It. carcassa, bomb; shell; case], 1, the dead body of an animal; 2, in contempt, the corpse, or the living body, of a human being; 3, the decaying remains of a bulky thing; 4, the framework or skeleton of a building, ship, etc. Also, car'case.

Syn. corpse, remains, frame. (See body.)

car-ci-no-ma (kär'sĭ-nō'mȧ), n. [pl. -nomata (-mȧ-tȧ)], [Lat. < Gk. karkinōma < karkinos, crab], Med., any of several varieties of cancer.

[1]card (kärd), n. [< Fr. carte < Lat. charta, paper < Gk. khartēs, papyrus leaf], 1, a piece of thick, stiff paper or of pasteboard, printed or plain, used for various purposes; as, a post card; a calling card; 2, a small piece of pasteboard printed with certain names, devices, or figures, used for playing games; especially, one of a pack of 52 such pieces arranged in four suits of thirteen each, according to the groups of figures printed upon them; 3, pl., any game or games played with such cards; card playing; 4, a formal invitation, especially to a wedding; often pl.; 5, a short business advertisement, as in a newspaper or magazine: Naut., a sheet on which the points of the compass are marked: Slang, a person unusual enough to attract attention; Obs., a written paper; a chart or map.

[2]card (kärd), n. [< Fr. carde, teasel head < Lat. carduus, thistle], an implement, as a wire-toothed brush or a wire-set strip of rubber, used for raising the nap on cloth, or for combing the fibers of wool, flax, or cotton, to prepare the material for weaving or spinning:—v.t. to comb, as wool, flax, etc., with, or as with, such an implement.—n. card'er.

car-da-mom (kär'dȧ-mŭm), n. [< Gk. kardamōmon, cardamom], 1, the seed capsule of any of several Oriental plants of the ginger family: used as seasoning and in medicine; 2, any plant producing these seeds. Also, car'da-mon; car'da-mum.

card-board (kärd'bōrd'), n. [[1]card + board], a thin pasteboard, used for cards, etc.

car-di-ac (kär'dĭ-ăk), adj. [< Gk. kardia, heart], 1, pertaining to, or situated near, the heart; 2, pertaining to the upper part of the stomach: —n. a medicine that stimulates the action of the heart.

car-di-gan (kär'dĭ-gȧn), n. [< seventh Earl of Cardigan, 1797–1868], a knitted woolen jacket or waistcoat: also called cardigan jacket.

car-di-nal (kär'dĭ-nȧl), adj. [< Lat. cardinalis, chief < cardo (-inis), hinge], 1, pertaining to that on which something else turns; hence, chief; fundamental; as, the cardinal sins or virtues; 2, of or pertaining to certain dignitaries of the Roman Catholic Church, called cardinals because originally in charge of the principal, or cardinal, churches in Rome; 3, of the rich scarlet color worn by these dignitaries: cardinal bird, an American finch having brilliant red plumage, a conspicuous crest, and a large red bill: also called cardinal grosbeak: cardinal flower, an American species of lobelia, growing along streams and banks of ponds, bearing bright red flowers (for colored illus. see flower): cardinal numbers, the numbers one, two, three, etc., in distinction from the ordinal numbers, first, second, third, etc.: cardinal points, north, south, east, west: cardinal winds, winds which blow directly from the north, south, east, or west:—n. 1, R. C. Ch., originally, the person in charge of a chief, or cardinal, church; hence, later, one of the Pope's council of princes of the church, appointed by the Pope; 2, the rich red color worn by these church dignitaries; 3, a hooded cloak formerly worn by women, originally resembling the cardinal's cloak; 4, the cardinal bird.—n. car'di-nal-ate.—n. car'di-nal-ship'.—adv. car'di-nal-ly.

car-di-o-graph (kär'dĭ-ō-grȧf'), n. [< Gk. kardia, heart + graphein, to write], an instrument for recording the movements of the heart.

car-di-ol-o-gy (kär'dĭ-ŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [< Gk. kardia, heart + -logia, a study], the scientific study of the heart.

car-di-tis (kär-dī'tĭs), n. [< Gk. kardia, heart], Pathol., inflammation of the muscular tissue of the heart.

car-doon (kär-dōōn'), n. [< Fr. cardon < Lat. cardus, carduus, thistle], an edible Old World plant (Cynara cardunculus) of the composite family, akin to the artichoke.

care (kâr), n. [< A.S. cearu, sorrow, and cearian, to grieve], 1, uneasiness of mind: anxiety; 2, a cause of such uneasiness or anxiety; 3, attention; watchfulness; heed; 4, that upon which such attention is bestowed; 5, charge or oversight: Obs., grief or sorrow:—v.i. [p.t. and p.p. cared (kârd), p.pr. caring], 1, to be anxious or uneasy in mind; 2, to feel inclined; desire; 3, to feel affection: with for: Obs., to grieve.

Syn., n. attention, solicitude, heed, caution, worry, trouble, concern, anxiety, regard, forethought, prudence, watchfulness, vigilance. Care is a troubled uneasiness of mind resulting from responsibility, duty, overwork, etc.; as, worn by care. Anxiety is a state of mental distress or pain, felt toward some uncertain event; it is colored by hope rather than despair. Solicitude is a milder form of anxiety; it often names merely a tender hope for the welfare of another; it is warmly desirous for, and active in, securing benefits for those to be loved and protected. Concern, when applied to people, shares with solicitude an affectionate desire for their good; when applied to issues or objects, it connotes a sympathetic, often active, interest; as, concern for another's safety. Worry names a futile, nervous agitation, often purposeless, always restless. Heed is an attentive watchfulness directed to the prevention of trouble; caution takes steps to avert what it fears. (See wisdom.)—Ant., n. heedlessness, inattention, negligence.

ca-reen (kȧ-rēn'), v.t. [< Lat. carina, keel], Naut., to turn (a ship) over on one side for the purpose of closing leaks, cleansing, or repairing:—v.i. to keel over; to tip: Naut., to incline on one side, as a ship under sail:—n. Naut., the slanting position in which a ship is placed for repairs to its keel.—n. ca-reen'age.

cast (kȧst), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. cast, p.pr. casting], [< O.N. kasta, to throw], 1, to throw; hurl, often violently; 2, to send in a certain direction, as a glance; project, as a shadow; 3, to throw down, as in wrestling; 4, to shed; molt; throw off; as a snake casts its skin; 5, to deposit forcibly; as, cast him into prison; 6, to send away or reject: with off or away; 7, to form into a certain shape; as, to cast clay into a statue; 8, to calculate, as a bill; 9, to bear; bring forth, especially before due time; as, the mare cast her foal; 10, to deposit (a ballot); 11, to send out or throw off (a swarm): said of bees; 12, to turn or twist: Naut., to veer; Theat., 1, to assign, as parts in a play to certain actors; 2, to assign certain parts to; Metal., to form, by pouring a liquid substance, as a molten metal, into a mold: Obs., 1, to vomit; 2, to emit or give out; 3, to think or intend; 4, to examine (urine) in order to make a diagnosis:—v.i. 1, to throw the line in angling; 2, to receive shape in a mold; 3, to consider; forecast; surmise; 4, to calculate; 5, to throw dice; 6, to turn or twist: Obs., 1, to shoot; 2, to vomit:—n. 1, the act or manner of throwing; 2, a thing thrown; the quantity thrown; the distance covered by a thing thrown; 3, a throw of dice; hence, fortune; 4, a turn or twist; especially, a turn of the eye; hence, a slight squint or error in focus; 5, manner; tendency; as, a humorous cast of mind; 6, shape; expression; as, a gloomy cast of countenance; 7, a faint shade of color; a tinge; 8, something formed by molding; as, a plaster cast; 9, a throw of a line, as in angling; 10, a calculation: Theat., the members of a company of actors thought of as assigned to certain parts; Metal., a mass of metal shaped by pouring in a molten state into a mold; a casting; Med., a substance formed in the cavities of various organs when diseased; as, renal casts found in the urine: Obs., 1, a trick or contrivance; 2, a chance:—adj. 1, cast-off; 2, shaped in a mold while fluid.

Syn., n. twist, bias, turn, mold; v.t. throw, hurl, fling, toss, pitch. These terms express the idea of impelling one object from another. Cast has been displaced in familiar usage by the more vigorous throw, but cast appears in many idiomatic and special uses, as defined above. Throw implies more effort than cast; it means to impel with force intentionally expended; as, to throw stones at a window; not infrequently, throw carries force intended offensively. The difference between cast and throw appears also in their figurative use; to cast aside a suggestion requires no more effort than to cast aside an unwanted object; to throw off bad associations, evil habits, etc., requires an actual exertion of the will. To hurl is to throw violently; often it suggests a large object, but it may merely indicate the force with which an object is impelled; as, he hurled the missile at my head. To fling is to throw suddenly; it is used of small objects, like dice, or of a carelessly slung stone, but it may be backed by violence or anger, and send a missile, a spurned gift, or an insult, very directly to its destination. To toss is to throw lightly or carelessly with a slight motion of the upturned palm.

Cas-ta-li-an (kȧs-tā'lĭ-ȧn), adj. [< Gk. Kastalia], Poet., of or pertaining to Castalia, a fountain on Mt. Parnassus, sacred to Apollo and the Muses, whose waters inspired all who drank thereof.

caste (kȧst), n. [< Port. casta, lineage; used of Hindus by the Portuguese, first colonists in India], 1, one of the restricted hereditary divisions of society into which Hindus are separated by Brahman religious law; also, the system which established this division; as, the laws of caste; 2, in general, a classification of society based on such externals as wealth or occupation; also, one of the classes so distinguished; 3, social position.

Syn. class, clan, order, rank, circle, coterie, club, clique, set, grade, degree. Each of these words names a group of related persons or objects. Class is the general term for any group whose members possess common characteristics; it may designate a social group; as, the leisure class; or it may be widely inclusive; as, the voting class; membership in any particular class might vary greatly with time or conditions. On the other hand, caste, which involves hereditary and sacred distinctions, is the most rigid of the terms which name the divisions of society; membership in a caste is exclusive; people may drop out, but rarely, if at all, enter a caste unless born to it. Members of a clan are bound together by common lineage. Those who form a circle are united by common interests. A coterie is a select circle, often of a social nature. The members of a club have a definite organization and purpose. Set names a group of people with similar ideas and manners, usually less exclusive, because larger, than a coterie. Clique names a small group, usually within a larger one, and has an unfavorable connotation; a clique frequently works only for its own ends, and is apt to be snobbish as well as selfish. Rank is usually applied to hereditary or military classes; order is ordinarily applied to societies of churchmen, as an order of monks; or to honorary classes or societies founded by sovereigns, legislatures, etc., as the Order of the Knights of St. John. Degree is used specifically of academic distinctions. Loosely, rank, order, and degree may be used to refer to any group. Grade names any of several groups divided on the basis of a fixed standard of quality.

cer-e-mo-ni-ous (sĕr″ĕ-mō′nĭ-ŭs), adj. 1, according to prescribed usage; 2, characterized by formality or solemnity; 3, observant of prescribed forms; precise; punctilious.—adv. cer″e-mo′ni-ous-ly.—n. cer″e-mo′ni-ous-ness.

Syn. formal, conventional. These words are alike in indicating a devotion to form or ceremony. Ceremonious describes occasions or things characterized by fulness of rite or polite observance; as, a ceremonious church service; a ceremonious visit. Carried to excess, ceremonious takes on an elaborateness that makes it pompous or even ridiculous. A ceremonious person is one who so fully observes every formality that he runs the risk of being too punctilious. Formal emphasizes a method of procedure; formal calls, formal intercourse between nations, formal parties, are carried out in an almost businesslike way; applied to the observance of social usages, formal suggests such a devotion to propriety that the result is oppressive. Conventional manners and people are those that are just what they are expected to be at all times.

cer-e-mo-ny (sĕr′ĕ-mō-nĭ), n. [pl. -nies (-nĭz)], [prob. < O.F. cerymonie < Lat. caerimonia, a sacred rite], 1, a sacred rite or observance; 2, the prescribed and formal usages observed on a public occasion, as at a coronation; 3, behavior regulated by the laws of strict etiquette; oppressive civility; 4, sometimes, empty form; conventionality.

Syn. ceremonial, form, rite, observance. Form emphasizes a customary or accepted mode of action; there is a certain form followed in conducting a church service; social behavior is governed by certain forms. Formality implies a strict adherence to forms, and frequently is no more than the routine execution of social or other duties; as, the monotonous formalities of social life. Ceremony names an outward manifestation attending a religious or public occasion; ceremony is apt to be stately, rather elaborate, often beautiful and impressive; as, the ceremonies dedicating the chapel were impressive. A rite is a solemn observance sanctioned by custom; it is applied to the stated ordinances of the church, or to the ceremonious acts comprising the ritual of a society.

Syn. periphrasis, diffuseness, wordiness, prolixity, redundancy, tautology, pleonasm, verbosity, verbiage. These terms all denote a surplus of words, in some cases justifiable, and in others constituting a fault of style. Circumlocution, technically called periphrasis, consists of the use of many words where few would do; it is a defect when it results merely in indirect or roundabout expression; it is justifiable when used for a purpose, a method of evasion. Diffuseness consists of a wordiness lacking all concentration of thought; it is the opposite of conciseness. Though diffuseness may not be desirable, it may yield substance enough to escape condemnation; but prolixity is always a fault. Prolixity presents a mass of trivial details, injudiciously selected and wearisome in the extreme. Redundancy is a tiresome use of words in excess of what is required; wordiness likewise means excess, but it connotes a long-windedness and emptiness not necessarily implied by redundancy. Tautology consists in needlessly saying the same thing over in different words; it is seldom justifiable; but pleonasm, another form of repetition, may be a legitimate means of emphasis. Pleonasm consists in a use of words which, if omitted, would not affect the meaning. Verbosity is a hopeless maze of words containing very little thought; but verbiage is worse; it is an accumulation of mere words, with no thought at all.

cir-cum-nav-i-gate (sûr"kŭm-năv'ĭ-gāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -gated, p.pr. -gating], [< Lat. circum, around + navigare (-atus), to sail], to sail completely around, as the earth or an island.—n. cir"cum-nav'i-ga"tor.—n. cir"cum-nav'i-ga'tion.—adj. cir"cum-nav'i-ga-ble.

con-ceal (kŏn-sēl'), v.t. [< O.F. conceler < Lat. con-celare, to hide], to hide; keep secret; secrete.—adj. con-ceal'a-ble.

Syn. dissemble, disguise, hide, secrete, cloak. Hide, the general term, means to put under cover, to put intentionally out of sight. The act of hiding may result from a set purpose, an accident, or a limitation of nature; a factory may hide a lovely scene by merely obstructing the view; things are hidden in the course of nature from the blind, the obtuse, the unsympathetic. To conceal, when asserted of persons or living beings, is always the act of intention; it consists in so managing as to prevent facts, objects, purposes, from coming to the observation of others; it connotes design and artfulness. Pain may be hidden, feelings concealed; only objects may be secreted. To secrete is to place beyond the knowledge or observation of all but the person involved. Stolen goods are secreted. To disguise, dissemble, and cloak are attempts to hide by different means. We disguise by making a thing seem what it is not; we assume gaiety sometimes to disguise grief. We dissemble by false appearances, by pretense. We cloak when we attempt to conceal by covering, either literally or figuratively, the thing in question; as, to cloak sins.

con-ceal-ment (kŏn-sēl'mĕnt), n. 1, the act of hiding or keeping secret; also, the state of being hidden; 2, a place of hiding; shelter.
